Duplicates RFC Powers, He Tells Senators; Author Redrafting It

By Felix Cotten.

Small busines aid legislation at this session of Congress became more doubtful yesterday when Chairman Marriner S. Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board, told the Senate Banking Committee that the Mead loan insurance bill would prove a veritable dud.

Senator Mead (Democrat), New York, is was learned, is contemplating an amendment to the bill, creating within the Reserve System, as proposed by Eccles, a large industrial bank to insure and to make small-business loans.

Since Eccles suggested the industrial bank as a supplement to the Mead plan, Mead is considering enlarging his bill to include the bank idea. The bill, which a number of influential New Dealers are promoting, provides for insurance by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of loans up to $1,0000,000. Eccles insisted, however, that it would merely duplicate powers which the law now gives the RFC.

Against Tax "Irritants"

Meanwhile Undersecretary of the Treasury John W. Hanes, indorsing before the House and Ways Committee plans for removing certain tax "irritants," declared it was the Administration's "duty" to make any tax changes that might stimulate private enterprise.

Eccles proposed that an industrial loan corporation—in effect, a bank—be set up within the Reserve System, although he said Congress could attach it to any other agency it desired. Its capital, insurance reserve and surplus would consist of money which Congress set aside from the dollar devaluation "gold profit" as the contribution of the Reserve banks toward stock in the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The Reserve Board chairman frankly did not visualize any large business recovery opportunities through more liberal extension of long-term credit to small business. The industrial loan corporation proposal, however, he said, has been worked out by Reserve Board experts to fill "a definite gap in our financial mechanism."

Other Developments

Other developments bearing on business recovery were:

The committee concluded hearings on new tax legislation, and turned over to the sub-committee on taxes, headed by Representative Cooper (Democrat), Tennessee, the task of drafting a bill. A Republican move, led by Representative Jenkins, Ohio, to open the door to general tax revision, was rejected by a strictly party vote.

For the first time since Jerome Frank became chairman, the Securities and Exchange Commission resumed discussions with New York Stock Exchange offi-

Tom Pendergast Stricken by Heart Attack in Prison

Leavenworth, Kans., June 5.—Suffering from a severe heart attack, Tom A. Pendergast, imprisoned political boss of Kansas City, was in a grave condition tonight.

Pendergast, who is 67, entered this prison a week ago to begin a 15-month term for income tax evasion.

Rigid censorship over news of Pendergast's condition was imposed by penitentiary officials. At a late hour this afternoon, James Pendergast, nephew of the stricken man, said the family had not yet been informed of the attack.

George and Elizabeth Descend 2,800 Feet to See Source Of Nickel for U. S. 5-Cent Pieces

By Edward T. Folliard

Sudbury Junction, Ontario, June 5.—King George VI, pride of London's tailors, made sartorial history today when his valet helped him into a pair of overalls. So attired, the usually elegant British monarch, accompanied by Queen Elizabeth, descended 2,800 feet into the famous Frood Nickel Mine at Sudbury, Ontario, whence come most of the 5-cent pieces which Americans jingle in their pockets.

Her Majesty and her ladies-in-waiting wore light silk waterproof cloaks, gloves and rubbers. They might have managed to retain a little of their chic up to this point, but then, in accordance with regulations, they had to don safety helmets.

It was just as well that Norman Hartnell, London designer who created the 50 gowns and ensembles which Her Majesty is taking to Washington, didn't see her today. His esthetic sensibilities could hardly have survived it.

On the way to Sudbury, at the French-Canadian village of Gogama, the King and Queen were saved from eight wolves. At least, that is the way the Ontario provincial police felt about it.

Joe Laflamme, a trapper and guide in the North Woods, wanted to present the wolves to the sovereigns, and was very much hurt when the police headed him off. For years he has been capturing wolf cubs and training them as sleigh huskies.

"But I tell you, monsieur, they would not hurt a soul," protested Joe.

The police took one look at the eyes and the fangs of Joe's pets and

Washington to See Second Parade as Sovereigns Leave White House for Embassy

By Hedley Donovan

The Union Jack of Great Britain today will flutter along Washington streets in profusion unequaled since days when British and American soldiers were fighting side by side across the sea. The British and American colors will hang from every standard on the 2-mile parade route King George and Queen Elizabeth will follow in Thursday morning's procession from Union Station to the White House.

Flags of the two nations, 300 of each, are to be mounted in clusters of three on alternate electric-lamp standards. American and British shields will be installed tomorrow. The first bunting appeared yesterday on Pennsylvania avenue and a restaurant was bedecked with banners proclaiming "Long Live the King."

Public excitement mounted with the 36-hour visit of the British sovereigns, conversation throughout the day was monopolized by plans for the event. It appears to be turning into a general holiday. In one Twelfth street barber shop the Italian-born proprietor was telling customers they must "look nice for the King and Queen."

The Weather Bureau last night was in genial mood, too, when it told The Post a preliminary forecast indicating "a good chance for clear skies Thursday morning." Showers now centering in Missouri and Oklahoma will move eastward and leave the District, but the King is expected to outdistance them. Thursday's temperature will reach "summer warmth," according to the tentative prediction.

Terrorist Fires At Duchess of Kent

By the Associated Press.

London, June 5.—A sawed-off shotgun was fired near the Duchess of Kent, sister-in-law of King George, and at about the same time tonight a glass panel was shattered mysteriously at the home of the princess royal, the King's only sister, in two apparent attempts to terrorize or injure them.

Scotland Yard, investigating both incidents, was reported to have under consideration whether responsibility lay with the Irish Republican army or its sympathizers who have been charged by police with waging a campaign of bombing and terrorism in England. The campaign earlier this year caused the Duke of Kent to cancel a tour of northern Ireland.

The duchess, beautiful and one of the most popular members of the royal family, was leaving her fashionable Belgrave Square home for the movies when the shot was fired.

She was not injured and was said not to have been aware of the incident, which occurred between 10:30 and 11 p. m. (5:30 and 6 p. m., E. S. T.) until after she had viewed the film "Wuthering Heights," at the Gaumont Theater. With her was Lady Portarlington.

Police overpowered and arrested an unidentified man seen near the Duke of Kent's house shortly after the shot was heard and later picked up the shotgun in the square.

The Mirror said the man was an elderly Australian who arrived in London three weeks ago.

The Duke of Kent, fourth son of the late King George V, and the duchess are to leave England next October for Australia, where the duke will be governor general of the dominion.

Ickes Opens 3d-Term Drive To Stop Garner

Sen. Burke Pledges His Support to Vice President

Secretary of the Interior Ickes last night urged a third term for President Roosevelt in a statement interpreted by observers as the opening of a "Stop Garner" drive and an attempt to gauge third term sentiment. Ickes said:

"This is no time for a candidate whose 'qualifications' consist of the fact that he has been chirruping weak opposition to everything the world's greatest democratic leader has done, or a candidate whose claim to office consists of the traitorous knifing in the back of the commander in chief to whom he has sworn fealty, or whose 'strength' is that of knowing nothing, saying nothing, doing nothing."

[Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, said at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, that he would support Vice President Garner if Garner sought the Presidential nomination, the Associated Press reported.]

Writing in Look, Ickes contended that if the people "can be trusted to elect a President for one or two terms, they can be trusted whether he shall have a third."

"I'm too devoted to Roosevelt personally to wish him to continue in a heart-breaking job, were there anyone to replace him, but I'm too devoted to my country to be unwilling to sacrifice to it, if necessary, even the well being and peace of a man who has earned peace."

The article pictured Garner, Cordell Hull, James A. Farley and Henry A. Wallace as the leading Democratic contenders for the 1940 nomination, and Thomas E. Dewey, Arthur H. Vandenberg, Robert A. Taft and Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., as the major Republican possibilities.

Not one of these, Ickes held, "could be influential in world affairs and at the same time command the respect of his own people."

Mrs. Kennedy Declines Bids to Royal Dinners

Hyannisport, Mass., June 5 (AP).—Invitations to attend the formal dinners to be given King George VI and Queen Elizabeth have been declined by Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, wife of the United States Ambassador to Great Britain, she said today at her summer home here.

Explaining that she was "very tired" and planned to spend a week golfing and swimming, declining all social invitations, Mrs. Kennedy said she came here Friday for a complete rest.

High Court Voids Hague's Meeting Ban

Milk Control

Free Speech Ruling

By Robert C. Albright.

Voiding Mayor Frank Hague's Jersey City restrictions against public assemblage, the Supreme Court yesterday by a 5 to 2 vote found Jersey City officials in violation of constitutional civil rights guarantees.

The high court split five ways on the decision, as Justice Roberts and Justice Stone cast separate opinions of the same net result. Justices Butler and McReynolds in effect held that Hague was within his rights.

Chief Justice Hughes, ill and absent from the court, concurred in the result of the Roberts decision but accepted Stone's reasoning in part.

Roberts' opinion for the court sustained Federal District Court injunctions and upheld with modifications the lower court finding that Hague and other city officials violated constitutional rights of free assemblage in interfering with C. I. O. meetings.

Roberts said the C. I. O. in Jersey City is now "free to hold meetings without a permit and without regard to the terms of the void ordinance."

"Citizenship of the United States," said the justice, "would be little better than a name if it did not carry with it the right to discuss national legislation and the benefits, advantages and opportunities to accrue to citizens therefrom. All of the respondents' proscribed activities had this single end and aim."

The C. I. O. and affiliated parties to the suit had contended they had

Traffic Victim Dies; 38th of Year

Death of a 44-year-old man from injuries suffered Saturday raised the District traffic toll to 38 for the year as two other persons were injured in traffic yesterday.

John R. Sisson, of 2110 Massachusetts avenue northwest, latest fatality, was struck Saturday by a street car.

Nine-year-old Sylvester Dorsey, 236 Sixteenth street southwest, was in a serious condition at Gallinger Hospital, and Minnie Murray was in Sibley Hospital after accidents in the District yesterday.

Costly Spotlights Sunburn WPA Actors, Inquiry Told

So much electrical equipment was crowded around the stage of the WPA production, "Sing for Your Supper," that the actors were said to have been "sunburned" from the heat and light, the House committee investigating the WPA heard yesterday.

H. Ralph Burton, a committee investigator, said that four $1,000 spotlights had been purchased, but only three could be used. He added that he was "informed by various people that in their opinion" the employe responsible for the transactions had "a connection" with the electrical concern supplying the spotlights. The investigator said that some equipment that could have been bought for $50 was rented for $100 a week.

A loss to the Government of $1,500,000 in four months was alleged to have resulted from a change in specifications for dump trucks used in WPA projects in New York. Lancelot Armstrong, Staten Island (N. Y.) attorney, described as a "swindle" a trucking contract won by a Vermont bidder.

Armstrong asserted that the trucks supplied by the Vermont contractor carried 24 loads at $23.30 a day, while those formerly used carried 31 loads at $13 a day.

The committee received in evidence an interoffice WPA memorandum showing how the work-relief agency in New York has provided jobs for nonrelief union workers

Arms Ban Test Due in House Today

Our Oceans 'Shrink'

Embargo Test

A test vote was promised today in the House Foreign Affairs Committee on repeal of mandatory arms embargo provisions of the present law, as the committee in a tempestuous closed session yesterday began writing a new draft of pending neutrality legislation.

With State Department officials present in an advisory capacity, the committee by a wide majority refused to vote Congress equal power with the President to proclaim a foreign state of war, naming the nations involved.

[A State Department official was quoted by International News Service as describing the Administration bill as a "stop-Hitler" measure.

Serve Notice on Hitler

[By lifting the provision in existing law for an embargo upon shipments of munitions to warring nations, the United States will serve notice on Chancellor Hitler that, if Germany goes to war with England and France, the arsenals of America will be at the disposal of the latter two nations and well-nigh impossible for Germany to reach, the official was said to have contended.

[This high Administration official was said to have described the measure to the committee as a "peace bill," which would virtually guarantee peace to America for at least a year, perhaps for many years. —Editor's note.]

Only one slight change was made in the Bloom Bill, which is said to reflect the neutrality views of Secretary of State Hull. The bill would authorize the President to issue a proclamation when wars were found to "endanger the lives of citizens of the United States, and threaten the peace of the United States."

New language substituted by the committee would empower the President to proclaim a foreign war when he found "it is necessary to protect the security or preserve the peace of the United States, or to protect the lives of citizens of the United States."

In line with Hull's views, the Bloom draft, on which the committee is voting, makes no provision for continuance of the present automatic embargo on arms shipments.

The test on that point is expected this morning, when Representative Vorys (Republican), of Ohio, moves to insert arms embargo provisions of the present law.

Fish Assails Bloom

A bitter personal row developed when Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, and Representative Tinkham (Republican), of Massachusetts, charged Representative Bloom (Democrat), of New York, acting chairman of the committee, with making "political" statements to the press.

Maryland Drivers Most Reckless in D.C., Report Shows

Maryland motorists, who comprise 10 per cent of the District's traffic volume, were responsible for half of the city's accident fatality toll last month, the Department of Vehicles and Traffic reported yesterday.

Six persons—four of them children—were killed in May. The toll last month was two greater than that of May, 1938.

Three of the motorists involved in last month's fatalities were residents of Maryland. Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer recommended that police increase enforcement efforts against out-of-the-city drivers.

Ott Pleads Guilty To Embezzlement

Justice Laws yesterday jailed Thomas E. Ott, former chief deputy United States marshal, after receiving his plea of guilty of embezzling more than $1,000.

Ott probably will be sentenced June 16, when Justice Laws will rule on the plea for probation.

Ott admitted stealing a check for $10.93, the sale price of gambling equipment seized by the marshal; sums of $11.62 and $14.34 which were seized in gambling raids, and $1,000 which was in his custody while an estate was settled.

You Can't Park Here:

Officials Would Ban Downtown Parking

This is the second in a series of articles dealing with the parking bugaboo in Washington.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Certain District traffic officials would like to see an absolute ban on all downtown street parking as a solution to the present problem.

Others are inclined to permit use of streets in the congested area for transient or short-time parkers and establish facilities just outside the central business section for motorists who drive their cars to work.

The latter proposal—which, by the way, is gaining headway among the powers in traffic planning circles—would be known as the "fringe" parking system. Car owners under this plan would leave their vehicles on municipally-operated lots away from downtown congestion and ride shuttle busses or street cars to their offices.

The problem of parking cars on streets in the business zone is rapidly getting out of hand.

Milk Inquiry Testimony to Be Secret

House Group Votes To Hear Accountants At Closed Session

By James D. Secrest.

The House sub-committee yesterday clamped down on Chairman Bates and its special counsel, J. Edward Burroughs in the District milk inquiry as the House District Committee prepared to rush through the Schulte bill to open the Washington milkshed to all producers without local inspection.

Meeting in an extraordinary executive session more than an hour, the sub-committee voted to have the testimony of its own auditors, who have been examining books of the local dairies, presented in executive session and to limit the examination of all other witnesses to 15 minutes by each attorney, including Burroughs.

Bates declined to reveal how the members voted, but under questioning he pointed out that he acted as chairman, and a chairman traditionally does not vote except in a tie.

The effect of the sub-committee's action will be to conceal from the public what was likely to be some of the most sensational testimony of the probe dealing strictly with milk.

Estil Smith, a certified accountant employed by the sub-committee and two accountants borrowed from the General Accounting Office, have been checking the accounts of the local distributers for several weeks. They have turned up some amazing records, it was

Union Asks Building Strike Arbitration

Contractors Expect Direct Negotiation Though; 1,600 Out

Possibility of arbitration to end Washington's construction labor strike was seen yesterday after 1,600 men left more than 100 of the city's major construction jobs with a demand for higher wages.

Larry Kelly, district representative of the three local unions involved—in Washington, Alexandria and Hyattsville—revealed that his group had asked for arbitration Saturday, "preferably with the United States Conciliation Service as the arbiter." Frank J. Sheehan, secretary of the Master Builders Association, the other party in the dispute, admitted that "it might come to arbitration," but added that he expected settlement by direct negotiation between contractors and the unions.

From other informed sources, as well, it was indicated that the most hopeful prospect for a speedy conclusion of the strike was arbitration.

Support was voted the strike last night by a general conference of the executive committees of Washington C. I. O. unions. Although the striking unions are A. F. L.-affiliated, at a meeting of the A. F. L. Central Labor Union last night the strike was not mentioned.

At the end of the strike's first day, contracting and union officials agreed on the basic strike facts:

Sixteen hundred construction laborers on strike involving more than 100 projects of a total value between $40,000,000 and $50,000,-

Refugees Granted Temporary Haven on Cuba's Isle of Pines

By the Associated Press.

Havana, June 5.—The wandering liner St. Louis today was granted conditional permission to land its 907 refugee German Jews on Cuba's Isle of Pines for a temporary stay.

President Laredo Bru, granting the qualified permission, gave Jewish aid organizations until tomorrow noon to accept the conditions.

Laredo Bru said the refugees might land if they agreed to live in a concentration camp which would be established on the Isle of Pines and if guarantees were given that their stay would be temporary.

[Tropical radio reported tonight the German steamship St. Louis had messaged it was en route to the Isle of Pines, according to word received in Miami.

[The message was received about 8 p. m. The liner then was at least 200 miles distant, the radio station stated. Earlier Capt. Gustav Schroeder had notified the Associated Press in Miami that his vessel was 60 miles due east of Daytona Beach, Fla.—Editor's note.]

President Laredo Bru explained his refusal to permit the St. Louis to land last Friday was because of failure to comply with regulations.

The president said that under the Evian Conference agreement Cuba had had a "moral duty" to accept the landing of 3,000 German Jewish refugees. He added, however, that since the agreement, more than 7,000 had landed, so the obligation was ended.

$49,522,985 Supply Bill Faces Fight in Conference; Ruhland Pay Cut Restored

An increase of $2,250,000 in the Federal lump sum payment to the District was put squarely up to the House yesterday when the Senate accepted without a murmur of dissent the $7,750,000 recommended by its Appropriations Committee and passed a District supply bill carrying $49,522,985.

Only two changes were made. One restored the salaries of Health Officer George C. Ruhland and his assistant, Dr. Daniel Seckinger, to $7,500 and $6,500, respectively. They had been cut $1,000 each on proposal of Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, chairman of the Appropriation Committee.

The other change deleted a proviso permitting inmates of the District Reformatory to repair school textbooks. This amendment was opposed by the American Federation of Labor.

Bill Goes to Conference

The bill now goes to conference, where a long fight is expected.

Chairman Collins, of the House sub-committee on District appropriations, has indicated he will resist the Senate increase in the lump sum payment and its $800,000 addition to relief.

Restoration of the salaries followed a speech by Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin who challenged the reductions on the ground that they were made to punish Dr. Ruhland for his stand in the Gallinger Hospital row with the local medical schools.

"If Dr. Ruhland is guilty of some error of administration or reprehensible conduct, proceedings should be started for his removal," he said.

"This is a strange way to resolve such controversies as the Gallinger Hospital row."

Senator Glass was not present, but Senator Overton and Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, sought to explain his reasons for making the proposal. They pointed out that Dr. Ruhland's predecessor was paid only $7,500.

McKellar Proposal Beaten

Subsequently, Senator McKellar offered an amendment upon behalf of Senator Glass to slash the salaries of the five resident physicians at Gallinger from $5,600 to $2,600. This also was defeated.

In both votes Republicans voted solidly against the amendments, while only a scattering of Democrats supported the Appropriations Committee chairman.

The proviso which would have permitted Lorton inmates to do the binding of school textbooks was stricken upon motion of Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, who protested that ample private labor is available for the work and that the appropriation in the Na-

'Allah Is Great,' Says Ruhland, Pay Cut Restored

"Allah is great," said Health Officer George C. Ruhland yesterday, when informed that the Senate restored to his salary the $1,000 cut by the Appropriations Committee.

"I appreciate the Senate's action very deeply," Dr. Ruhland added. "It is an indorsement of a health administration which is attempting to carry out an adequate program for care of the indigent sick."

Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, assistant health officer, whose pay also was cut and then restored, said, "We've been working hard, and this decision is very gratifying."

PAJAMA PORTRAIT

Incredible Brain Truster

Gone now are most of 1933's Brain Trusters, but the President clings to Adolf Berle.

Gone, too, was Berle, from 1934 to 1938, when he brain-trusted for LaGuardia. But he returned as Assistant Secretary of State in February, 1938; resigned in August; his resignation was rescinded in September; he got leave of absence last January to return to Columbia University's faculty, and his leave was rescinded in April.

Berle is credited with as high-powered a brain as Chief Justice Hughes'. His wife installed a second tub in their bathroom so she could hear his pre-breakfast brilliance.

Incredible and dazzling are the topics on which Berle has experted: Russia, peace, Cuba, agriculture, finance, Pueblo Indians, securities, sugar, railroads, monopoly, trade agreements. He seconded Cordell Hull at Buenos Aires and Lima, drafted several of F. D. R.'s foreign notes.

Once when France Perkins lamented the shortage of brains in Washington, Berle (so goes the legend) said, "Well, I can't be in New York and Washington simultaneously!" A Harvard grad at 18, rugged individualists can't stigmatize him as a theorist and campus prodigy, because he foresaw the 1929 crash in time to get out of the market with a handsome pile. His almost frantic shyness keeps him out of politics. Now his proposal for a capital credit banking system is attracting more attention here than if it had been made by almost any other man in the Capital.

Germans Protest Nazi Spy Film to State Department

By International News Service.

The German government has lodged bitter diplomatic representations with the State Department concerning the Warner Brothers' film, "The Confessions of a Nazi Spy," it was learned yesterday.

A note signed by the German charge d'affaires, Hans Thomsen, denounced the picture as an example of pernicious propaganda which has been "poisoning" German-American relations.

The department said the contents of the note were brought to the attention of the motion picture producers and distributors organization and that Dr. Thomsen had been assured.

Supreme Court Upholds Milk Market Control

Administration Farm Program Sustained Down the Line

The Supreme Court yesterday in two split decisions upheld Federal milk marketing controls assuring minimum milk prices to producers in the New York and Boston areas by votes of 5 to 4 and 6 to 3.

Both majority rulings were delivered by Justice Reed, one reversing a lower court ruling invalidating the New York milk marketing order proclaimed last September, and another sustaining a Federal Court decision upholding validity of the Boston order.

The two decisions, handed down as the court stepped from the bench for its summer recess, was the last of a series upholding the Administration's farm program down the line. Last month the court sustained the validity of marketing quotas under the revised AAA act.

Government by "Caprice"

Although joining with Justices Roberts, McReynolds and Butler in the minority holding that the New York milk agreement was illegally discriminatory, Chief Justice Hughes failed to go along with Roberts, Butler and McReynolds in their dissent from the Boston decision. The latter three contended that provisions of the AAA act of 1937, under which the milk agreements were made, was basically unconstitutional.

In a separate and vigorous dissent from the New York milk marketing validation, Butler and McReynolds declared Congress lacks power to "manage private business affairs under the transparent guise of regulating interstate commerce."

They said law allows Secretary of Agriculture Wallace "to prescribe according to his own errant will and then to execute," adding: "This is not government by law but by caprice. Whimseys may displace deliberate action by chosen representatives and become rules of conduct."

Child Labor Action

In still another opinion, the court ruled that the pending Constitutional amendment to abolish child labor is still subject to ratification, even by a State which previously had rejected it, although 15 years have elapsed since it was first proposed by Congress.

Litigation on the status of the amendment came to the court from two States, Kentucky and Kansas, both of which once rejected the amendment but later ratified it. Nine other States also had ratified the long-pending amendment after previous rejections. Approval by 36 States is required and only 28 have ratified it to date.

In both tests, Justice Hughes wrote the opinion. Answering the contention that the amendment was dead because of the time lapse, Hughes said Congress had the final say on that question.

Butler Presides

In the absence of the Chief Justice, these opinions were read by Stone. Justice Butler presided over the court. Hughes' physicians, meanwhile, said they were "well satisfied" with his condition and that he is in no danger.

Three points challenging constitutionality of the milk marketing agreements were overruled by Justice Reed in the New York and Boston cases, the court asserting that Congress has power to fix minimum prices, that the equalization pool through which producers receive a uniform price is valid, and that authority given Wallace was not an unwarranted delegation.

U. S. Not Business Foe, Says Farley

Knoxville, Tenn., June 5 (AP).—Postmaster General Farley tonight told the Knox Conty Democratic Women's Club "nothing could be more absurd than the idea that this Administration—or any other Administration, for that matter—is an enemy of business."

The cry that the Government is an enemy of business goes up in Washington, the Democratic chieftain asserted, whenever a measure is conceived "for the benefit of the people at large . . . There can be no real prosperity in a nation made of a handful of multimillionaires, with the great mass of the people so near starvation that their every day is a day of anxiety."

Will Rogers Family Waits Unveiling of Statue Today

Wife and Son Wish They Knew What Humorist Would Say Now of Capitol Of Which He Wrote With Powdery Wit

Will Rogers' home folks came to Washington yesterday to witness unveiling this afternoon of the bronze bust of the humorist in the rotunda of the seat of Government that Will used to crack about with his powdery wit.

His widow and his son, Will Rogers, jr.,—a boy with his father's face but no pretentions to his fathers' humor—and his sister, Mrs. Sally McSpadden, and his niece, Mrs. Paula Lowe, sat in a Shoreham Hotel apartment and talked yesterday afternoon of the simple home things.

They talked about the weather; and of how young Will's newspaper—the Beverly Hills, Calif., Citizen—is getting along; and about the memorial to Will in Oklahoma, of many things near to them, of homey things that were full of the character of Will Rogers.

Won't Trade on Fame

"What would Dad think of Washington now . . . the Congress and the visit of the King and Queen?" asked Will, jr." I don't know. I can't talk as he did . . . And, besides that, if I knew what he thought of it I'd put it first in the Beverly Hills Citizen!"

Neither were the others ready to trade on Will's fame or try to imitate his manner. Mrs. Rogers, a quiet, courteous woman who must have been bedeviled terribly for stories about her husband, said to the question her son had avoided:

"I would only like to know what he would think of it all now." And when her picture was taken by a Post photographer, it wasn't herself she thought of but her husband.

Between National Heroes

"Will took such grand pictures," she said. "His pictures were always so much like him; so natural." The family then talked about Will for a while.

"All of the children show some of his characteristics," Mrs. McSpadden said. The other children, James and Mary, will arrive today, coming from Los Angeles. Will, jr., came yesterday. He had driven from Beverly Hills to New York, from New York here. Mrs. Rogers, with the other relatives and the memorial delegation from Oklahoma, came by train.

The bust will be unveiled at 2:30 p. m., on a temporary base, situated between statues of George Washington and Alexander Hamilton. Congress several months ago gave permission for the unveiling in the rotunda. The bust will be permanently placed in Statuary Hall later.

Seas No Longer Protect U. S., Says Woodring

Tells House New Weapons Have Made Us More Vulnerable

Development of "speedier and more powerful weapons of war" has destroyed the security the Atlantic and Pacific oceans once afforded the United States and left the Americas "no longer continents in a military sense," Secretary of Air Woodring said in testimony made public yesterday.

The War Secretary told the House Military Appropriations sub-committee that it was this factor—"the extremely rapid scientific development of new instruments of war"—rather than the international crisis, which impelled President Roosevelt to launch his emergency defense program.

$309,500,000 Bill

Woodring urged the sub-committee to approve in every detail the $309,500,000 bill before them. He described the program as "well-rounded" and "exceedingly conservative and modest" and said it would permit America to "speak with authority for peace."

Meanwhile, the Senate gave final approval to the $100,000,000 strategic war materials bill, and sent it to the President for signature. It adopted a conference report authorizing a reserve of manganese, tin, rubber and other essential materials not produced in quantity in the United States.

Woodring made a plea for early enactment of legislation establishing a third set of locks for the Panama Canal, declaring that construction of spare locks for Naval use in war of "paramount importance."

Criticizes Extremists

To guarantee the impregnability of the canal, he said, not only must antiaircraft and aviation units there be increased, but additional air bases be established in Puerto Rico, Hawaii and the southern part of continental United States. Hitting at "extremists" who urged an air force of from three to four times that at present, Woodring said of the preparation of the present 5,500 plane program:

"Some extravagant statements were made by some extravagant public speakers, but close appraisal of all tentative studies led the way to a modest, balanced program based alone on the defense of this Nation."

Congress Library Acquires Original 'I Pagliacci' Copy

The original manuscript of "I Pagliacci," most famous opera of the composer Ruggiero Leoncavallo, has been purchased for permanent display at the Library of Congress, it was announced yesterday.

The manuscript, in Leoncavallo's own writing, was bought with funds bequeathed to the library by the late Herbert Witherspoon, famous concert and oratorio singer who was appointed director of the New York Metropolitan Opera just a few months before his death in 1935. The document, which will be exhibited above a brass plaque, is a memorial to Witherspoon's first wife, Florence Hinkle, also a noted concert singer.

The manuscript, written in 1892, was acquired from a dealer at an undisclosed price. It had been sold by the composer's family.

House Rejects Revisions of Pay-Hour Act

Last-Minute Change Fails to Win Farm Bloc; Norton Gives Up

Despite a last-minute effort to appease the farm bloc, the House yesterday decisively turned down an Administration proposal to alter the wage-hour law under procedure that would have cut short debate and prevented further amendments from the floor.

Despite a rarely used parliamentary maneuver the proposed changes in the law were blocked by a vote of 167 to 110—with the result that Chairman Norton of the Labor Committee announced she would make no more attempts to amend the wage-hour act this session.

Cox Disputes Norton

Nevertheless, Representative Cox (Democrat), of Georgia, one of the leading opponents of the "gag" procedure advocated by Mrs. Norton and Majority Leader Rayburn, asserted that the Rules Committee would see to it that the House had an opportunity to consider changes of the act with full freedom of debate and a chance to widen the proposed amendments.

For the second time in three weeks, Mrs. Norton was balked by members of the farm bloc in her efforts to relieve "hardship cases" under the present law and to extend certain agricultural exemptions. To meet farm objections the Labor Committee revised the agricultural provisions last week.

In answer to the charge that even the revised agricultural exemptions took more away from the farmers than they gave, the committee hastily drafted another amendment in the Speaker's office yesterday afternoon specifically providing that all exemptions existing in the present law would continue unimpaired by the proposed amendments.

Cox Calls Change "Decoy"

Despite an explanation by Rayburn, Cox told the House that the amendment was "nothing more than a decoy." Soon afterward, the House voted down the entire bill.

Charging that "pressure groups" had defeated her, Mrs. Norton added that "this is one licking I don't mind taking, as I feel we went too far with our amendments exempting agricultural workers." She asserted that five farm organizations, large-scale canning and ice cream interests and other groups who were fighting the bill "don't want what they ask for—what they really want is complete repeal of the whole wage-hours law.

Radio Men Urge Repeal of FCC Ban

The National Association of Broadcasters asked the Federal Communications Commission yesterday to set aside a new regulation, effective November 1, which would limit international broadcast stations to programs promoting "goodwill, understanding and co-operation."

The association charged the regulation infringed upon freedom of speech, was contrary to this Nation's foreign policy, and was an arbitrary assumption of power not delegated by law.

Royalty Crowds 3 Sons Out Of White House

Franklin, Jr., James, Elliott and 2 Latters' Wives to Go to Hotel

There will be no room at the White House for out-of-town Roosevelts when King George and Queen Elizabeth arrive.

But they will not go to stay with neighbors, as usually happens when a similar problem confronts the average American home. They have reserved a large, air-conditioned suite at the Mayflower Hotel.

Activity at the White House yesterday was at a high pitch as preparations for the royal visit neared completion.

Arrangements have been made to stock the larder with the necessary extra food supply tomorrow. All the food cannot be taken in, however, in advance, and police will be instructed to give the "green light" to trucks destined for the White House.

The White House lawn is not being overlooked. It will be in top condition.

But there will be few flowers in bloom. Tulips and pansies have gone and there will be a three-week interlude before the next rose crop.

James, Elliott and Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., plan to stay at the hotel suite.

The royal party will take three meals at the White House—luncheon Thursday, dinner Thursday night and breakfast Friday morning.

American foods will be served so far as practicable. There will be broiled sweetbreads for lunch, boned capons as the chief dinner source and the usual bacon and eggs for breakfast.

Carl (right) who will present valuable shark's tooth, the gift of National Capital Area Boy Scouts, to King George on Thursday

Frederick D. Carl, 18-year-old Woodrow Wilson High School senior, today is rehearsing one brief sentence more carefully than any actor who ever prepared for his first Broadway appearance.

The sentence will accompany the presentation of a 10,000,000-year-old shark's tooth, the gift of National Capital area Boy Scouts, to King George VI.

Carl was chosen last night from 60 candidates, nominated from the 7,500 Scouts of the District and nearby Maryland and Virginia, to make the presentation when King George and Queen Elizabeth review Boy and Girl Scouts of this area on the south lawn of the White House at 4:45 p. m. Thursday. He is an Eagle Scout and assistant scoutmaster of Troop 15. A Girl Scout, not yet selected, will present a bouquet to Queen Elizabeth.

Victor Kebler, sr., assistant scoutmaster of Troop 69, and his son, Victor, jr., who found the fossil and mounted it on a cedar block after drilling a hole through the rose-colored wood, hope His Majesty, leader of the British Boy Scouts, will use it as a neckerchief slide when he appears in Scout uniform.

Young Kebler was selected last night to stand in the guard of honor for Thursday's review along with Carl and two other Scouts—Robert F. Ricker, of 4621 Langdrum Lane, Chevy Chase, Md., and Norman Robinson, of 1128 Park road northwest.

Sovereigns Amused by Social Tempest Garden Party Stirred

Member of Royal Entourage Suggests That 3,000 Tickets Be Given Out And Let Everyone Attend Function

By Inez Robb.
International News Service.

On Royal Pilot Train en Route to Guelph, Canada, June 5.—Now it can be told that the second American revolution, occasioned by Lady Lindsay's garden party at the British Embassy on Thursday, is not being taken seriously by the guests of honor, Their Majesties.

In fact, the King and Queen are amused by the social tempest-in-a-teapot.

The King-Emperor and his royal consort, according to a member of the royal entourage on the blue and silver train, are both amused and amazed that the entire social structure of Washington has been tore asunder in furious warfare over a party at which Their Majesties will make a polite, 20-minute scheduled stop. After 20 minutes Their Majesties will bow out and nip off to the White House for a spot of rest before the state dinner in their honor given by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

One of the brightest spots of the long, tiring Dominion tour for both Their Majesties and the members of their suite has been newspaper accounts of the stress and strife occasioned by the grand manner in which American-born Lady Lindsay has handed out invitations to the party which has become a battleground of social aspirations.

Garden parties in England are as common as cocktail parties in New York. So George VI and Queen Elizabeth are unable to comprehend why the garden party has caused so much hysteria and heartache.

"What balderdash," said a member of the royal entourage. "Why don't they just hand out 3,000 tickets and let everyone come? The King and Queen would have just as good a time if they could stand out on Massachusetts avenue in front of the embassy and talk to anyone who came up to them. Why all this fuss about the proper clothes for the garden party? Why, Their Majesties don't care a bit what others wear."

Which is only too true. Their Majesties, throughout this whole tour, have never seemed so happy, so genuinely pleased or carefree as when mixing with the crowds that have come in off farm and plain to crowd the small stations where the royal party has made brief stops.

King Visits Mine In Overalls

decided it best to keep the wolves from the royal door.

Tonight the royal train was gliding toward South Parry, where it was to stop until morning, the next-to-last overnight halt before it carries the sovereigns across the American border near Niagara Falls on Wednesday night for the dash to Washington.

Already the 50 Canadian Mounties aboard the pilot train and the royal train are getting ready to leave at the boundary and return to more prosaic tasks. Chief Constable Canning and the other two Scotland Yard men will, of course, continue on to Washington, after being reinforced at Niagara by American Secret Service men.

These Scotland Yard men hover close to the King and Queen. Four of the mounties form an honor guard for them, while the rest jump out at the different stops to form a cordon against the crowds.

With all respect to Maj. Ernest W. Brown's bluecoats, who will perform that task in Washington, it is a pity that the Canadian Mounties are not going all the way.

Strapping six-footers all, handsome in their red tunics, blue, yellow-striped breeches, their boots and riding crops, they have given the royal tour in Canada a dash of color that will never be forgotten.

The understanding here is that King George will wear only formal clothes and lounge suits in Washington. In his admiral's uniform or his guard's uniform, he is perhaps the most resplendent figure ever seen in North America.

Queen Elizabeth, they say, has now worn 35 of her magnificent costumes and has begun to repeat. But the gowns and ensembles she will wear at the White House and at the British Embassy have yet to be unveiled to a waiting fashion world.

This was another glorious day, with a bright sun glinting on the regal blue and silver train, more than one person has given thought to the astounding luck the King and Queen have had from a meteorological standpoint.

Trapped in fog and icebergs and delayed for two days off New Foundland, they have seen the law of compensation worked out to its full. Every day of the three-week journey has been like this today, with the exception of two. It rained in Winnipeg and it rained in Regina. But that was in a wheat country that has known droughts, and the King and Queen were hailed as royal rain-makers.

The Britishers aboard are wistfully hoping that the royal luck in the matter of weather will hold out in Washington, a hope doubtless shared by President Roosevelt, Weatherman Reichelderfer and everybody else in that queenly city.

523 Degrees Awarded at Georgetown U.

Colorful Graduation Closes Celebration of Sesquicentennial

Georgetown University, stately in the pride of 150 years' academic history, ended its week-long celebrations yesterday with the relaxation of a "family affair" when it awarded 523 degrees to graduates of the sesquicentennial class.

The festive and colorful ceremonies were marked with the undertone of irrepressible jubilation as graduates tossed their hoods over their shoulders and thought of textbooks purely in terms of resale value.

With mortar-board tassels bobbing, they marched off the Hilltop campus with optimistic words in their ears—a "God bless you all" from the university president, the Very Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, and a reminder that "the prospects before the youth of America are not dark," from the commencement orator, Charles H. English, Pennsylvania chief bar examiner.

Close Big Celebration

Georgetown's modern education, based on classical foundations, was symbolized at the outset when a huge airliner swept low over the crowded campus just as the choir sang the last strains of a Latin hymn.

The exercises marked the close of the university's largest celebration, for which the severe gray stone buildings were decked with bunting and the neighborhood for several blocks around the "Hilltop" was flag-draped.

Father O'Leary, opening what he described as a "home-like gathering," reminded his new alumni that Georgetown stood in need of endowments and gifts "if we are to maintain our place among the universities of the land." He said the establishment's greatest need at the moment was an auditorium-recreation center. Other objectives are a new hospital and science building.

English, who received law degrees from Georgetown in 1905 and 1906, and an honorary doctor of laws in 1935, warned that big business was no longer the sole field of achievement for the young man. Instead, he said, the small and local business ventures, the colleges, schools, legislative chambers, churches and the realm of art, thought and science constitute the new frontier.

Taking as his theme "If winter comes . . . can spring be far behind?" English asked to "dissent as vigorously as I may" from the prevailing feeling of pessimism provoked by world affairs.

Bachelor of arts degrees were presented to 49 members of the college and to 40 graduates of Woodstock College. Twelve received B. S. degrees and another 47 B. S. degrees in social science. The school of medicine awarded diplomas to 73 new doctors.

In the graduate school five ph. D.'s were awarded, eight M. A.'s, seven masters of science. The law school graduated 147 bachelors, 22 masters and 7 doctors of law. Degrees were given to 45 doctors of dental surgery, 46 graduates of the foreign service school and 14 who graduated in business and public administration.

Following the award of degrees, Maj. Charles E. Rayens, commandant of the military department, presented candidates—whose boots and spurs were to be seen beneath their academic robes—for commissions in the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Degrees awarded yesterday at graduation exercises of Georgetown University were:

at the expense of persons on the certified rolls.

The New York WPA "has given work to at least 5,000 nonrelief A. F. of L. mechanics during the current year" (1938) and has "assigned from time to time A. F. of L. mechanics to North Beath Airport, although relief mechanics were being demoted on other projects," said the report.

Parrott Resigns

Burton said that Joseph N. Parrott, now connected with the American Oil Co., had resigned as assistant chief of WPA labor policy in New York because he held that discrimination in favor of the A. F. of L. interfered with proper labor relations.

The committee also heard testimony that the New York WPA had paid $81,560 to persons who, given work relief jobs on recommendation of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, turned out on further examination to be ineligible for relief.

Of 1,212 persons put to work on a women's coat-making project last August, 41 per cent were subsequently dismissed as ineligible, said E. W. Erickson, committee investigator. The employes had been certified by the I. L. G. W. U., said Erickson, instead of following the usual procedure of being certified by the home relief agency. The witness said he had been told that the system of union certification had been authorized by Aubrey Williams, former deputy WPA administrator.

WPA Memorandum

The WPA memorandum showing "what the Works Progress Administration in New York has done for the A. F. of L." and detailing some of the nonrelief jobs given A. F. of L. workers was signed by W. P. Spreckels, chief of the labor policies section, and John J. Fogarty, administrative assistant in the division of employment, in New York. It was addressed to Edward G. Sabine, director of the division of employment.

The memorandum, divided into two parts, said that the WPA "has kept A. F. of L. workers from having to establish relief status by assigning non-relief mechanics to WPA projects;" has kept up morale "by giving work to mechanics at a time when private construction was practically at a standstill;" and has "prevented a breakdown of union conditions."

Van Duzer Asks Prosecution in All Car Crashes

Hits System of Dropping Charges if Drivers Settle for Damages

Washington's system of permitting motorists to evade prosecution in accident cases by out-of-court damage settlements yesterday drew fire from Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer.

Supporting recent action of the Federation of Citizens Associations demanding court appearances of all drivers deemed responsible for accidents, Van Duzer said the District's present method of handling crash cases has resulted in a general breakdown of enforcement and control efforts.

Citizens Urge Prosecution

"In other cities where real headway has been made in reducing accidents," said the traffic director, "every driver involved in a mishap is taken into court and prosecuted on the basis of evidence against him—whether he is willing to settle damages or not."

Harry S. Wender, safety chairman of the Federation of Citizens Associations, in a recent report to that body pointed out that District laws do not compel a motorist to face prosecution if no policeman witnesses the crash and both parties involved agree to settle their differences.

Although accident principals are required to appear before an assistant corporation counsel in Police Court for a hearing, if they decide to "get together" and settle damages the entire matter is dropped, Wender reported.

'Safest Cities' Cited

Van Duzer said he repeatedly has advocated a system of court prosecutions for all persons responsible for accidents, adding:

"The manner in which these persons go scot-free under our present method is regrettable—to say the least. I fail to see how we can accomplish our purpose if guilty parties are freed just because the financial end of damages is settled."

In the Nation's "safest cities"—Milwaukee, Wis.; Evanston, Ill., and Providence, R. I.—laws demand the prosecution of every driver found to be at fault in a highway mishap, said Van Duzer, even though damages are taken care of beforehand.

tional Capital would establish a bad precedent.

Senator Hayden (Democrat), of Arizona, commented that prison convicts are permitted to perform numerous jobs which do not compete directly with commercial industry. He cited the manufacture of automobile tags.

"Maybe it's in the interest of the schoolbook trust to stop this binding of District schoolbooks by convicts," he said. "If this work is not done, the books will not be rebound."

Labor pressure was put on Collins when the matter was considered in the House sub-committee, it was learned, and the chairman dropped the proposal.

Seeks Action This Week

Meanwhile, Chairman Nichols, of the House sub-committee on fiscal affairs, announced that he would continue his efforts to have the District revenue bill reported by the House District Committee this week regardless of the Senate action in boosting the lump sum payment.

If the $7,750,000 should be accepted by the House, he said, the revenue bill can be killed in the Senate.

A special meeting of the House District Committee has been scheduled for Thursday morning to take up the tax bill. Several amendments are to be considered, it is understood.

The citizens' committee on fair taxation yesterday addressed to the committee members an open letter attacking the business-privilege levy proposed in the Nichols bill as a "thinly disguised sales tax, and opposing the sliding real estate tax plan.

The letter, signed by Mrs. John Boyle, jr., chairman, asked that the gross receipts tax be dropped and the personal-income tax be lowered above the proposed $10,000 base. The intangible-property tax, Mrs. Boyle said, should not be repealed.

The Senate, in acting on the District supply bill, adopted two legislative amendments to authorize construction of the proposed new main library in the Municipal Center site, and to authorize the building of a new National Guard armory at the lower end of East Capitol street. The latter amendment carried an appropriation of $350,000 to start the project. The library will cost $1,118,000.

Of the $2,257,778 added to the supply bill by the Senate, $1,049,697 goes to the schools, chiefly for replacement of obsolete buildings.

The other major addition is the $600,000 for relief, of which $300,000 would be used to aid destitute employables, who are now denied relief in the District.

Senator McKellar, during consideration of the District supply bill, arose to complain against the installation of iron poles around safety zones at the intersection of Pennsylvania and Constitution avenues.

Committee Censured

Representatives of Washington C. I. O. unions last night censured the action of the House District Committee "for refusal to call to public hearings anyone who opposes a reactionary unemployment compensation bill and for unanimously passing such a bill." The bill in question was introduced by Representative McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, and approved by the District Committee yesterday.

cials on remaining proposals in the report on the Richard Whitney case for reorganizing the exchange. No announcement was made, except that the conversations had been "friendly and helpful."

"There are, at bottom, only two ways of producing wealth," Hanes told the Ways and Means Committee. "One way is to conscript labor and capital and put them to work under Government compulsion. This way is unthinkable in America.

"The other way is to provide the incentives of wages, interest dividends and profits. This is the way to which we are committed, the only way we can think of taking.

"That being the case, it becomes our duty to examine carefully the fiscal policies of the Government with a view to determining whether they provide all legitimate and necessary incentives to private enterprise in the production of wealth.

"Wherever we find that the tax system may be operating against necessary incentive and is interfering with legitimate and necessary enterprise, it seems to be plain that it is our duty to correct the situation."

Saying huge Federal expenditures were due largely to unemployment relief, social security and other social laws, Hanes remarked that "social reforms desired by the people can be sustained and developed only by recovery of private enterprise, which, after all, is the backbone of Federal revenue.

The budget cannot be balanced, he said, merely by cutting expenditures. A larger national income is necessary and stimulation of private enterprise is the way to provide that.

Hanes indorsed the long-term fiscal program submitted to the committee by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau on May 27 as well as his program for removal of tax irritants.

Eccles' criticism of the Mead bill revived speculation of a "feud" between him and Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the RFC.

For Liberal Policy

Eccles has strongly advocated a more liberal loan policy by banks during depression periods. He feels that neither the RFC nor the Reserve banks, which Congress also has empowered to make industrial loans, have properly filled the small business credit "gap."

The Reserve banks, he insisted, have been hampered by too many restrictions placed in the law.

Unless Congress is willing to adopt the proposal for an industrial loan corporation, which would enable the Reserve System to carry out a unified, Nation-wide policy, he said, the existing authority for small business loans by Reserve banks should be repealed.

He asked that the provision in the Mead bill authorizing rediscount and purchase by Reserve banks of insured loan paper be eliminated. Banks that are members of the Reserve System, he said, would already have this privilege, and nonmember banks, which are not subject to the system's regulations, should not have it.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

The Cinema Observes Its Golden Jubilee This Year

Edison Created Moving Images in 1889; Senator Barbour Sponsors a Salutary Bill; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

THIS YEAR OF 1939, it seems, marks the golden jubilee of the motion picture. If you had dropped in on Thomas A. Edison 50 years ago, a helpful brochure from the Will H. Hays office points out, you probably would have found him dividing his time between experiments on the phonograph, his pet project at the time, and a photographic device with which he hoped to show objects in motion.

BELL

With his assistant, William Kennedy Laurie Dickson, Edison had been at work on motion photography since 1887. Progress was blocked by the lack of a flexible substance in strips long enough for his purposes. It was not until the Rev. Hannibal Goodman, of Newark, N. J., applied for a patent on a film base of nirtocellulose, in 1887, that a solution of the difficulty seemed imminent and not until 1889, when George Eastman hit upon a suitable flexible film base for photographic emulsions that it was solved. Thereupon Edison and his associate went to work with renewed vigor. It was the Eastman film that Edison used in his experiments.

Dickson went to work so effectively, in fact, that, when Edison returned to West Orange from a trip to Paris on October 6, 1889, he saw pictures in motion for the first time through the peep-hole of his Kinetoscope No. 1. His further experiments were successful. The motion picture was born.

It is from that modest beginning that the present far-flung industry of the motion picture sprang. In his authoritative book on the cinema, "A Million and One Nights," Terry Ramsaye, present editor of Martin Quigley's Motion Picture Herald, has this to say on the subject: "Meanwhile, mark you well this Edison peep-show Kinetoscope. Every strand in the thread of motion picture destiny runs through it.

"Every motion picture machine, every motion picture enterprise, every motion picture personality, screen star or magnate of the screen theater, can be traced to some connection growing out of the little black box that Edison dubbed the Kinetoscope. This is one of the absolute facts of the history of the motion picture. It must be stated most positively, in view of the hundred and one contrary and unfounded assertions of other claimants.

"It is provable that there is not now and never has been, subsequent to the year 1888, any motion picture film machine whatsoever of any relation to the screen art of today that is not descended by traceable steps from the Kinetoscope."

While all of this early experimentation dates back a full half-century, it was not until 1896 that "movies" were introduced to Broadway. I saw my first one a year or two after that as a sensational added attraction on a vaudeville bill at Kohl and Castle's Chicago Opera House, in Chicago. I didn't believe it, hanging over the rail up there in the top gallery.

I sometimes wonder how many pictures I have seen, altogether, since that time. It must run up into the millions!

And the strange part of it all is that "movies" do not move. The illusion is created, as everybody must know by now, by the projection of a quick succession of "still" scenes, each a little different from the one before, at a scientifically determined number of "frames" per second and at a specified speed. And those figures you see on the screen don't talk, either. All of their voices come out of stationary sound horns advantageously placed back of the silver sheet. It is your imagination that puts the speech in the mouth where it belongs—not that I wish to disillusion you, or anything like that.

This column is completely and unequivocally in favor of the passage of Senator Barbour's proposed bill in Congress to nullify the stupid law that bans the interstate transportation of fight films. This is one of those unenforceable statutes—like the prohibition law—that has become inoperative through a total lack of public sympathy with its hypocrisy.

The situation becomes a trifle grotesque when it is considered that prize-fighting is legal in the District, but pictures of boxing matches held in other States cannot be shown here otherwise than in defiance of the authorities—a position local exhibitors have consistently and ethically refused to take. There is no law against the showing of fight films. The Federal statute merely bans the transportation of pictures of ring battles beyond the borders of the States in which they are held. Nobody pays any attention to this ancient legislative blunder and fight pictures are shown all over the land—barring Washington.

It all came out of the social crises that were precipitated when Jack Johnson defeated Jim Jeffries back in 1910. For a time, enforcement of the law was rigid, as the requirements of the day seemed to demand that it should be. But that emergency has been long passed. It is time the silly thing was rescinded.

Senator Barbour is the logical solon to put the nullifying measure through Congress. He knows what he is talking about, having once been a bit of a pugilist himself. If I have my memory on straight, Senator Barbour was formerly amateur heavyweight boxing champion of the United States. I believe he missed becoming a professional, and probably a heavyweight champion, only through the intervention of his family.

If his present effort is successful, he will have performed a genuine service both to boxing and the public.

"Victoria the Great," celebrated historical resume of England's golden era, when Britain became the world's greatest empire, will be revived at the Little Theater tomorrow, with the thought in the back of the management's mind, no doubt, that the King and Queen will be in Washington this weekend. Anna Neagle appears in the title role and gives an uncommonly fine performance, spanning the years of Victoria's life from young girlhood to old age. It is a picture worth seeing again, even if you already have seen it once.

They tell me that when the Roadside Theater opens next Monday night, music will play an important part in the production of "The Pioneer's Daughter." There will be guitars, banjos, cowboy songs and all such. But the theme song of the evening seems to be "Who Threw the Overalls in Mrs. Murphy's Chowder?"—of all things. Natalie Core will sing it.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

THE THEATRICAL Trade Council, parent organization of the Musicians, Stage Hands, Motion Picture Operators, Teamsters and Sound Technicians Unions, as well as the American Federation of Actors, met Saturday afternoon to discuss a general walkout at the New York World's Fair because of excessive abuses . . . A group of film officials, including Will Hays, has been meeting the past few days with Harry Hopkins, Secretary of Commerce, concerning the Government's anti-trust suit against the major movie companies . . . Prominent Broadway figure are portrayed, with their true names slightly disguised, in the late Thomas Wolfe's posthumous novel, in which he bared the most intimate details of his life.

ERROL FLYNN and his wife, Lily Damita, visited the Waikiki Cafe in Mexico City recently . . . As is the custom there, one of the young ladies employed in the barroom greeted Flynn by flinging her arms around him and embracing him vigorously . . . The unshrinking Mrs. Flynn rectified matters forthwith and discouraged any other ladies from further embraces. Lily merely lifted a plate, bounced it across the amorous girl's head and then politely sat down.

FOR HIS vaudeville tour, Orson Welles will do 15 minutes of "The Green Goddess," coupled with a movie trailer . . . Paramount has purchased Irene Kuhn's book, "Assigned to Adventure." The author will go to Hollywood this week . . . Billy Livingston's second film will be a full-length movie called "Dancing Debutantes." Jean Harrington and Mrs. Hal Kemp will appear in it . . . For the first time in her career, Libby Holman will dance—when she appears in the play "Burlesque." Libby now is taking instruction in waltz-clog and soft-shoe routine . . . The newsreel companies tested their cameraman's boycott against the fair by assigning one man there—and firing him for disobedience.

ROARK BRADFORD, now in New York, went to a local bookshop to buy a copy of his "John Henry." When the proprietor asked $7.50 for a copy Bradford offered 25 cents, insisting "That's all it's worth" . . . "But it's a first edition, and rare," the owner stated . . . "25 cents," Bradford repeated. "And besides, it's not even an autographed copy" . . . "Well, maybe I can get it autographed," the salesman offered . . . "No you can't," the author assured, "because I wrote it. Im Roark Bradford" . . . "Oh yes, of course," the salesman returned. "Would you mind autographing the book?" . . . "I certainly would mind," replied Bradford—and walked out.

WHEN ALEXANDER Woollcott went to Callander in connection with his movie-short about the Dionne quintuplets the local press referred to him as "Moon-puss" Woollcott . . . his jowls would shame a bulldog with the mumps . . . his head is as wide as a broodmare's rump." The reporter had believed Woollcott, when Alec said that he loved to be libeled . . . For the past six months the George Abbott office has received $70 in money orders from an anonymous Jamaica resident. They traced the payments to a clergyman there, who explained that one of his flock had asked him to send the money—in connection with the "Boy Meets Girl" production. The books of that show reveal no defalcations or thefts.

LEW BROWN, called Robert Lewis, the Group Theater director, to assist in the production of his new show . . . "I saw that show you directed, 'My Heart's in the Highlands,'" Brown stated, "and you know what that had? That had pathos. Now in my show, Jack Pearl has one strong two-minute bit, and I want you to direct it" . . . "May I see the script?" asked Lewis, but Brown refused . . . "If you won't even let me read the script," Lewis told him, "and you're already in production, what do you want ME for?" . . . "Well, when the show starts running," said Brown, "and Pearl comes on, then I want you to punch—with the pathos."

THE AMERICAN newsreel companies recalled their Royal Tour cameramen, after Montreal, because the Canadian newsreel officials insisted upon exercising their right to censor all shots . . . Ben Hacht saw Gene Fowler's new manuscript, and wrote: "When Tomorrow counts our literary noses Fowler, who has been posing for years as a Fife-and-Drum Corps, will be revealed as lusty and robust a writer as was Cervantes" . . . William Bekos, the Cotton Club's downstairs-greeter, won in a single-handed tussle with six husky collegians there this week. In the daytime Bekos is a Coney Island lifeguard . . . Gracie Allen is being signed to appear on "Information Please."

FRIDAY NIGHT, at the League of American Writers reception for Thomas Mann and Eduard Benes, William Saroyan insisted upon being allowed to take to the platform and sing there . . . "But can you sing?" the writer was asked . . . "Can I sing?" Saroyan assured. "My singing is known from one end of my street 'n Fresno to the other."

FRIDAY AFTERNOON a group of visitors at the Paramount Building, office of Jimmy Johnston, the sports promoter, heard bands blaring in the street, and rushed to the windows to watch the parade . . . "That's Tom Mooney," someone informed. "Yes, that's Tom Mooney" . . . "How do you know?" he was asked . . . "I lived in the same house with him for seven years" . . . The "house" he referred to was San Quentin Prison . . . The man was Kid McCoy.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., June 5.—When Spencer Tracy said that the most important thing is that a play shall have a buoyant, uplifting effect on its audience he scattered truth. Spencer feels that there are so many big topics in the world that it's silly to waste time on the lesser ones. He's not rebelling against parts he's getting, but wants to maintain their high standard.

HOPPER

Bob Montgomery's been saying the same thing for years. Then, after each outburst, he was handed a "B" picture. Now, however, they've seen the light, and he's off to England to do three pictures. The most important news is that he'll play the lead in "The Doctor's Dilemma" with Greer Garson opposite. He does "Earl of Chicago" which he's been longing to do for several years. It's way off the beaten track. He plays a gangster who dies. Victor Saville who produced "Chips" is crazy about it, too.

With pictures like "Pygmalion," "Chips," "The Citadel," catching and holding the public attention and affection, our producers are beginning to realize that the fans' intelligence is far above the 13-year mark. Then, too instead of cursing the dictators of Europe, because they've affected our foreign market, Hollywood should be grateful to them. They've been turning out some wonderful pictures over there. In fact, at the present time, we're making over at least seven of them with Hollywood casts and equipment just as we did "Algiers."

When France can turn out a picture like "The Puritan" for $27,000—which here would only pay for a few tests—and "Prison Without Bars," that's real competition. And something to worry about!

For the benefit of Roz Russell and Paulette Goddard, who are doing a fist fight in "The Women," they've assembled all the female fights from other pictures for the gals to see. And have gone way back to Geraldine Farrar and Jeanie McPherson in "Carmen;" Marie Dressler and Polly Moran, who pulled hair and threw furniture. Ginger Rogers and Frances Mercer. Connie Bennett and Alice Faye in "Tail Spin."

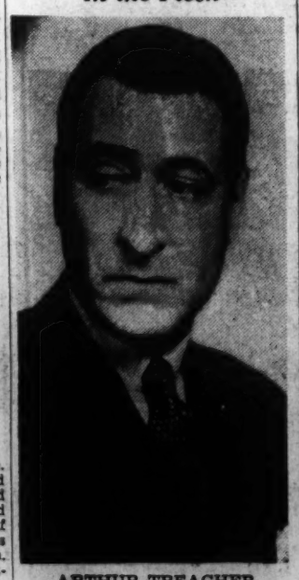
Gloria Jeans tells me that Jack Roper is coaching her in battle scenes with Ann Gillis for "The Under Pup." Which is all pretty silly, 'cause I never knew a woman yet who couldn't fight at, or for, the drop of a hat. And believe me, women obey no rules. My sister, when I was the under pup, took delight in wearing my clothes first. When I was big enough to battle, I warned her to stop. She wouldn't. So I went to it. My hair was still long, which protected my face—hers was up. She never left the house for a week. When she did, she admitted a cat had scratched her. She was right—I had. Yes, it broke the habit.

Hope you didn't miss "The Peace Gun" over the air the other night. Ted Scherderman, who's writing "Brenthouse," authored that, too. The cannon, supposed to kill 5,000 with one shot, was bought and paid for at 10 cents a throw by school children. But unfortunately, a pacifist fell into the molten steel and was rolled into the gun and wouldn't allow it to kill. He talked from the inside of the weapon to soldiers who came guarding it.

Naturally he preached peace. Those messages were carried through the ranks—soldiers refused to fight. It's a fantastic idea and would make a powerful picture, if you could get it by big business which profits from war and death. Needles to say, they battled its getting on the air!

Miriam Hopkins gave a honey on Thursday night, welcoming Eastern visitors. I haven't seen the place so gay since Ina Claire threw a party for Noel Coward when she was Mrs. Jack Gilbert.

'In the Flesh'



ARTHUR TREACHER,

famous screen comedian, who will appear in person on the stage of Loew's Capitol Theater to headline the vaudeville bill, beginning Friday

Trans-Lux

The newsreel men were right on the job at Indianapolis to catch the smash-up in the Memorial Day auto race classic in which the daredevil racer, Floyd Roberts, lost his life. Happening right in front of the cameras, it adds another sensational disaster picture to the record, and again gives the Trans-Lux Theater a rare and extraordinary news shot.

The tour of Britain's King and Queen reaches the Far West, and the reels show them visiting Fort Garry, then welcomed by the Indians at Calgary and then resting amid the gorgeous mountain surroundings of Banff.

Other highlight news pictures are the ill-fated flivver flyer's take-off at Old Orchard, Me.; the venerable Paderewski boarding the S. S. Normandie, departing for home; commencement ceremonies at the Annapolis Naval Academy and Henry Picard winning the Metropolitan Open golf championship. Twenty-five other items are pictured.

The "shorts" of the second part of the program are a very enjoyable travelogue on Venice, "Airwaves," a most interesting subject on radio and radio broadcasting, which includes a visit to the master studios; then a splendid English picture, "Choice of a Pal," about dogs. "Memorial Mountaineers," with Betty Boop, and it is funny and ridiculous, completes the program.

Cross Roads Opens Season With Hit Play

'Abie's Irish Rose' Given Worthy Revival Over in Virginia

By Nelson B. Bell

"ABIE'S IRISH ROSE." The Cross Roads Theater Players present the postwar comedy in three acts by Anne Nichols. Directed by Howard F. Wentworth; settings by Nell Linger. At Bailey's Cross Roads, Va.

—THE CAST—

Mrs. Isaac Cohen	Ruth May
Isaac Cohen	Charles Hohein
Dr. Jacob Samuels	Lewis Brott
Solomon Levy	Edmund J. Evans
Abraham Levy	Don Sisler
Rose Mary Murphy	Peggy Johnston
Patrick Murphy	Bob Langley
Father Whalen	Ted Field

Favored with a cloudless, cool June evening, the Cross Roads Theater, over at Bailey's Cross Roads, in Virginia, last night inaugurated its summer season of "barn theater" with a cleverly acted revival of Anne Nichols' fabulous, postwar comedy of "Abie's Irish Rose." An audience of comfortable proportions again discovered a source of high mirth and almost continuous laughter in the time-honored lines and situations devised by Miss Nichols to point her theme of racial antagonism between the Levys and the Murphys.

Since "Abie's Irish Rose" holds the all-time New York long-run record—although "Tobacco Road" is beginning to threaten—the time seems to have passed to observe that it is a superficial and slightly tawdry play that Miss Nichols authored 'way back when. Superficial and tawdry or not, the three acts of this famous work embody much that sinks a little deeper than the surface emotions. Underneath the feud between the Jewish family and the Irish there is to be found much that springs from true and honest emotions.

The story, of course, is known to everyone who ever has been to the theater—the marriage of Abraham Levy and Rose Mary Murphy, by a Methodist clergyman over in Jersey, the fear of the wrath of their widowed fathers, the repetition of the ceremony first by a rabbi and then by a priest—to satisfy all concerned—and finally the reconciliation on Christmas Eve, when twin boy and girl make it possible for their grandfathers to forget their animosities and shake hands, just as the final curtains close.

Is Difficult Chore

Despite the obviousness of its comedy devices and the thin humor of its carefully "planted" speeches, "Abie's Irish Rose" is not easy for a semi-professional group to play. Five of the characters must speak in Jewish dialect; three in an Irish brogue. With neither nationality represented in the cast last night, this requirement still was effectively maneuvered. There were lapses occasionally, to be sure, but never of such seriousness as to impair the premise upon which the comedy is based.

The role of Solomon Levy, the father of the lad who married the Irish girl, offered a well-judged and admirably sustained characterization of an elderly man who sees his life's hopes tumbling down about his head. Don Sisler, in the role of Abie, being of the second generation, assumed no accent, but portrayed his youthful young husband "straight" with earnestness and vigor, if not too much humor. Probably the best work of the evening was done by Peggy Johnston, as Rose Mary. Miss Johnston employed a delightful brogue just often and long enough to prove that she could and, for the rest, made her performance an ingenuous and charming delineation of a young woman both in love and in a predicament.

As the Irish father, Patrick Murphy, Bob Langley was off key a good deal of the time. His "Irish dander" was so overdone that it became, at times, a little hard to take. With a little toning down, his portrayal will catch more nearly the spirit and the tempo of the play. Ted Field, in the minor role of Father Whalen, turned in one of the most convincing bits of the evening, enacting his role with restraint and complete naturalness. In the secondary roles of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Cohen and Dr. Jacob Samuels, Charles Hohein, Ruth May and Lewis Brott rendered valuable service.

Easy on the Paint, Please

Last night's chief flaw lay in the matter of makeups. The Cross Roaders need to take more care in the application of their grease paint, lest they continue to appear as "overdone" as they did last night. The chief offenders in this regard were Ruth May, Bob Langley and Lewis Brott. The brunette Miss May was so heavily made up that she more nearly resembled some sort of malevolent sorceress than a patient just out from her favorite operation. The Messrs. Brott and Langley should learn that there is something more needed for the simulation of age than a dozen or so wrinkles heavily painted across the brow. But this no doubt is mere carping. Perhaps, in the eighth row, I was sitting too close.

When all is said and done, "Abie's Irish Rose," as presented at the Cross Roads, still is an interesting and an amusing comedy. It is, furthermore, sufficiently well done to deserve a larger audience than was in attendance at the season's opening. Howard F. Wentworth's direction is smooth and attains a swift pace in acts two and three, where acceleration is essential to the success of the play. Nell Linger's settings are adequate and in good taste.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, June 5.—"Falling Stars" sounds simply grand. Al Jolson will sing the famous Hebrew chant, "Kol Nidra," the first song ever sung in talking pictures. Warner Brothers have given Darryl Zanuck permission to reproduce this sequence of "The Jazz Singer," made 11 years ago—and, incidentally, the first successful talkie ever made. This "Falling Stars," you see, is really historical and I wonder why Zanuck changed the title. I like "Hollywood Cavalcade" so much better.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Ben Turpin and Chester Conklin will do one of their "Keystone" specialties with Mal St. Clair directing under Mack Sennett's supervision. Ben will do one of his old-time back flops and that certainly reminds me of the days when Ben did bits on the Essanay lot and acted as sort of general messenger boy when he wasn't working. Guess I'd better stop or you'll soon find out how old I am.

Hotter than a firecracker is the deal now on between Charles Laughton and RKO for him to be the star of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." He was supposed to sail June 1, but at the last minute canceled his sailing. Even so, the whole RKO crowd will be greatly disappointed if the deal isn't signed in a day or so. Laughton hasn't been here since he and Uncle Sam got into income tax difficulties, but in the meantime he has made "Rembrandt," "The Beachcomber" and "Jamaica Inn" which were all successful in Dear Ole Lunnon. He does even better, however, in pictures made in America, not that we wish to be partial.

Those of us who live in Los Angeles and vicinity read today the dramatic story of an iron lung being rushed to Mrs. Zossia Kinskey, wife of a Hollywood actor. While she was waging her fight for life today, her husband, Leonid Kinskey, was trying to be funny with Eddie Albert on the "On Your Toes" set. He had just been given the part, the best one he has had in a long time, and it would have made him happy if he could have been sure that his wife would recover, but grave doubts are held for her recovery even though the miraculous mechanical aid to breathing is being used. Just one of those stories that happen in Hollywood, th e city of heartbreak.

Red-headed, green-eyed Greer Garson, Hollywood's newest sensation, couldn't be happier. Gertrude Lawrence has invited her to appear on the radio program now being prepared for Their Majesties, King George and Queen Elizabeth, when they visit the White House. Naturally, La Garson, who is British, accepted, for an invitation to appear before Their Majesties, whether in person or on the air, is a royal command. Interesting that this request was made because of "Goodbye, Mr. Chips," made by an American film company, and not because of her English successes. I suppose all of the top British talent in the U. S. A. willl be on Gertie's show, for it's an honor all our Britishers covet.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The Bette Davis-George Brent romance is on stronger than ever. They both get a vacation at the same time this summer and when Bette's divorce decree is final and they wed, don't forget I told you first; Mrs. Ria Gable didn't get to Texas soon enough. Her daughter's new baby was born dead while she was en route; Mickey Rooney's real heartbeat is one of Harry Beaumont's twins. Wonder why Harry, who is a swell director, doesn't get a job? June Gale in bed with a terrific sunstroke, following a whole afternoon on the water in a broken-down launch; Mary Howard and Nino Martini at Marcels. Where was Ned Marin, Mary's heartbeat for several years? Richard Greene's leg is in a very bad condition and it will be a week before it is possible to put a cast on; Hedy Lamarr and Gene Markey Sundayed on Gene's yacht at the Ishthmus; Edith Barrett is here for a visit with Vincent Price.

And why not, she's his wife; Jules Stein will furnish the music for Mike Romanoff's party; Cary Grant escorted Lucille Fairbanks to the Dorothy Lamour cocktail party. Maybe Doug's niece looks a little like Phyllis Brooks; Randy Scott, Charles Barnet, Howard Hughes, Wynn Rocamora and all Dottie's admirers at her party which went on and on. Alec Templeton, blind piano genius, played the selection he and Meville Fiesson wrote for Lamour and it's lovely; Anita Loos is that excited over her vacation, which will be spent in New York seeing the World's Fair. She leaves the eighteenth; June Lang looking her prettiest, escorted by Joe Pasternak to the Victor Hugo's Sunday night high jinks; Ann Rutherford, cute as can be, in a ringside seat with Charles Isaacs; Irene Hervey and Allan Jones had a taste of ranch life when they week-ended in their trailer on the property Allan has just bought; the reports of coolness between Jean Parker and George MacDonald are aparently all wrong. He flew into town to spend the week-end with her.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow.

Peril of Last 8 Saved From Squalus Told

Admiral Cole Lauds Efficiency of Rescue Crew Operations

For the first time yesterday the Navy revealed the danger facing the last eight survivors of the submarine Squalus when the diving bell stuck below the surface for four hours, May 24.

In his official report on the disaster, Rear Admiral Cyrus W. Cole, officer in charge of the rescue operations, told of the bell descending to the bottom twice during the trying period and of the retrieving cable becoming so frayed under the strain of lifting the bell that only one strand of wire held it to the rescue ship Falcon. Reports at the time simply described the bell as caught 150 feet below the surface by a snagged down-haul cable.

Cole highly praised the heroism, efficiency and initiative of those participating in the rescue operations. It was these qualities and the successful performance of the Navy's life-saving equipment which accounted for the rescue of 33 persons from the sunken submarine, the admiral informed the department.

Admiral Cole related how Chief Machinist's Mate William Badders and Torpedoman John Mihalowski, went into the rescue chamber to open an escape hatch in the flooded stern of the submarine and ascertain definitely that the 26 men trapped therein were not alive.

"These men were fully aware of the great danger involved," he declared, "If they became incapacitated, there was no way in which they could be rescued, as the chamber could not be entered from the outside."

Downtown Parking Ban Is Urged

area are prohibitive and to construct off-street park facilities within walking distances of Government and private office buildings would place parking fees far above the reach of average motorists.

To obtain sufficient space for municipally-operated lots in the congested section, officials say they would be forced to pay anywhere from $5 to $15 per square foot if the land was purchased at its assessed value. In order to make ends meet, motorists would be required to pay from 50 cents to $1 a day to park their cars—which they wouldn't do, traffic heads agree.

"Fringe" Land Cheaper

However, they say, by going just beyond the congested area—land for car storage spaces could be bought for an average price of 90 cents a square foot and motorists could park for as little as 20 cents a day.

This, however, would necessarily mean establishment of rapid mass transportation facilities to care for the 120,000 Government workers and 34,000 private business employes who daily enter the downtown section.

Traffic planners throw up their hands in horror at the suggestion of underground parking areas. For instance, they say, should parking facilities be constructed beneath the Ellipse, the District would spend the next 50 years making up the expenditure.

Costs Up to $1 a Day

It takes 160 feet of space to store one car—leaving room for it to move in and out. The cost of underground facilities would run between $1,500 and $2,000 a car—and at least 1,000 car spaces would be necessary to make the venture practical at all.

This would mean that motorists would pay more than $1 a day for the right to park—even at the minimum fee to cover expenses.

So determined are the majority of motorists to drive their cars to work—and so anxious to find free, all-day parking spaces—that many downtown streets with unlimited parking are filled as early as 6:30 a. m. Hundreds of others go to work early and leave their cars on streets bordering the congested area and walk to their offices.

learned, both as to profits and as to the juggling of accounts.

One of the accountants made a special trip to Chicago to check on the banking account of the owners of one of the local dairies, it was understood, and has discovered evidence that indicates considerable quantities of "bootleg" cream has been purchased under the guise of eggs and butter.

One of the sub-committee members indicated that he may go to the United States Attorney's office with evidence that one of the policemen perjured himself with reference to the use of dictographs and the tapping of telephone lines in connection with the inquiry.

Present at the closed meeting were, besides Bates, Representatives Randolph, chairman of the full committee; Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana; Byron (Democrat), of Maryland; Tenerowicz (Democrat), of Michigan; Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, and Vreeland (Republican), of New Jersey. Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, an ex officio member, was absent.

Bates said that about a dozen more witnesses are scheduled to be heard.

The sub-committee discussed at some length the use of dictographs in connection with the milk investigation, but came to no decision. The only lawyer member of the committee present was asked for an opinion as to the legality of the procedure, but he declined to give it on the ground that he was unfamiliar with District laws. Several members of the sub-committee were highly critical of the activity of the Metropolitan police in taking stenographic records of private conversations.

With spokesmen for the Western producers apparently in control, the House District Committee prepared to vote on the Schulte bill Thursday regardless of the fact that the milk inquiry will not be concluded by that time.

The committee became embroiled in a heated discussion of the bill at the morning meeting and decided to postpone action after Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, pointed out that apparently no member had read the measure.

The bill was then methodically read by the clerk, after which it was compared with the 1925 milk act. Its purpose, the committee agreed, finally, is to permit the legal importation of cream into the District from any dairy farm in the United States that can produce a certificate of inspection by its own local health officers.

Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal pointed out several defects in the legislation and asked that a proviso be written in to prohibit the mixing of this imported cream with skimmed milk for sale as bona fide milk in the District. His appeal apparently fell on deaf ears.

The bill is opposed by the District health department, Seal said.

The meeting opened with a clash over the reported use of dictographs in connection with the inquiry. Representative Bolles (Republican), of Wisconsin, demanded to know where the dictaphones were placed, who authorized their installation, and who took the responsibility.

Representative Bates said he assumed full responsibility and explained that they were installed in the offices of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association and the office of John S. Barbour, association counsel, with their full knowledge, and in Room 840 of the Hamilton Hotel. He denied that any dictographs had been placed in the House Office Building.

After Schulte had repeated several times the charge that "they" are trying to stop his bill in order to protect a local milk monopoly and prevent the enactment of any corrective legislation this session, Byron demanded that he explain who he meant by "they."

"The Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association," Schulte replied.

000. These include such large-scale jobs as the Mellon Art Gallery, Municipal Courts Building, Government Printing Office, Gallinger Hospital and Doctors' Hospital.

Almost complete stoppage of work on the Jefferson Memorial, four University of Maryland buildings, the Bethesda Health Center and the New York avenue bus terminal.

Impossibility of continuing what work is now going on, conducted by other building trades workers not involved, for very many days longer.

Some 400 union laborers are working, however, on construction jobs conducted by contractors not members of the Master Builders Association. About 100 more will resume work today on the Pennsylvania avenue bride, whose constructors, the Penker Co., of Cincinnati, reached an agreement with the union yesterday.

Although the two parties are apparently as far apart as ever on the single issue of the strike—a wage raise from the present 70 cents per hour to 80 cents for unskilled and 95 for semiskilled workmen, effective February 1, 1940—a singularly friendly attitude prevailed between them.

Sheehan said that no attempt would be made to substitute non-union men for strikers, and said that although no plans were made for a resumption of negotiations, he believed that either side would respond to a call for a meeting by the other.

"These men are our friends," he said. "We're in disagreement, to be sure, but we don't want any violence and we aren't going to have any. We wouldn't consider hiring 'blacklegs.'"

He added that his group would meet at 3 p. m. today with the District Carpenters Council.

Union workers threw picket lines about the struck projects yesterday, but withdrew them after a few hours, on the grounds that anyone who would cross them had already done so and there were no more to come.

From the Labor Department, Conciliator Howard T. Colvin, who has brought the disputants together in several meetings without achieving an agreement, gave word that he hoped to arrange another meeting "within the next two or three days, unless a new angle develops to bring them together sooner." He declined to indicate what the "new angle" might be, but said he was hopeful of having the strike settled within the week.

After a meeting of the District Carpenters' Council last night it was disclosed that the organization's national headquarters had approved the local body's strike call, taken some weeks ago, when the Master Builders refused to accede to the carpenters' demand for $13 for seven hours' work, in place of $12 for eight hours, contained in their contract which expired April 30.

A carpenters' spokesman said he hoped the strike would be averted by negotiations tomorrow. If it were called, however, he estimated that 2,000 men on 75 jobs would walk out.

The Jersey City Case

There was never much doubt that the Supreme Court would find unconstitutional the notorious Jersey City ordinance, under which effort was made to bar C. I. O. organizers from Mayor Hague's domain. The real point of interest was the nature of the highest judicial opinion whereby, as it was anticipated, civil liberties would be established in that municipality.

Thus attention concentrates on the two opinions which divide the majority in its decision that constitutional guarantees must be re-established in Jersey City. One of these was delivered by Justice Roberts and concurred in by Justice Black. The other was delivered by Justice Stone and concurred in by Justice Reed. A separate concurring opinion by the Chief Justice in the main aligns itself with the Stone opinion. Brief, but separate, dissents were filed by Justices Butler and McReynolds. Justices Frankfurter and Douglas took no part in the consideration and decision of the case.

The division is thus 5 to 2 against the Hague procedure. But while the Roberts-Black opinion narrowly limits itself to the case in point that delivered by Justice Stone probes deeply into the whole fundamental matter of freedom of speech and assembly. "I am unable to rest decision here," says Justice Stone, "on the assertion, which I think the record fails to support, that respondents must depend upon their limited privileges as citizens of the United States in order to sustain their cause."

Looking far beyond the Jersey City situation Justice Stone maintains that the issue concerns neither the citizenship of the demonstrators, nor the purpose of the proscribed meetings—so long as lawful—nor the money valuation of the rights infringed upon. The due process clause, and legislation enacted under it, the justice contends, makes the narrow interpretation of the Roberts-Black opinion unnecessary and undesirable.

The latter opinion is enough to set the situation right in Jersey City. But if the majority had followed the line convincingly argued by Justice Stone there would be no need to worry about petty dictation by other Hagues, in other American municipalities.

Encirclement

In his address at an assemblage of German war veterans Sunday, Chancellor Hitler took occasion once again to inveigh against what he describes as "encirclement" threats against the Third Reich.

In doing so he undoubtedly struck a popular chord. No nation suffers more from claustrophobia than does Germany. Now, as before the World War, she is fearful of being surrounded by a ring of enemies. For this reason it has been fairly easy for the Nazi propaganda machine to portray the British efforts to create an anti-aggression bloc as a Machiavellian plot to strangle the Reich.

Actually nothing is further from British thoughts. Great Britain, France and Germany's other neighbors are all eager to live on terms of friendship with the Third Reich. All they ask of Hitler is that he refrain from destroying the independence of neighboring nations as he has already destroyed the independence of Austria and Czecho-Slovakia.

It is only because they so justifiably suspect and fear Germany's intentions that some of the nations of Europe are now seeking to pool their forces to resist further aggressions. If this is "encirclement" then, obviously, Hitler is right. But in so defining that term the Fuehrer is tacitly admitting that Germany's territorial appetite has not yet been satiated.

As Premier Daladier pointed out, on the very day that Hitler was addressing the German veterans, what France and Great Britain are seeking to achieve is "to find a way of enabling Europe to live happily in a free collaboration of peoples."

"Such a policy," he went on to say, "cannot be considered one of encirclement . . . That is a vain pretext invented for propaganda purposes. We are for collaboration, which is just the opposite of encirclement. But each time that we have made a step in this direction Hat[illegible] the answer has been some act of force. some[illegible] . . . Surely there can be no better proof For[illegible] that their aim is hegemony." and doin[illegible] Certainly no statesmen have given they'[illegible]ater proof of their anxiety to collaborate peacefully with the Third Reich than have Messrs. Chamberlain and Daladier. It was only when Hitler tore up the pledges of peace personally made to the British and French premiers and showed that he would allow no moral barriers to stand in his path of domination, that they began to build the non-aggression bloc.

The Third-Term Fight

Secretary Ickes' appeal to President Roosevelt to run for a third term foreshadows a spirited fight over this issue within the Democratic Party. The Secretary's "exclusive statement" in Look magazine is played up by its editors second only to photographs of six women who have had 40 husbands between them. It might almost have had precedence over these ladies, considering Sunday's announcement that Vice President Garner will be a candidate for the nomination regardless of what Mr. Roosevelt decided to do.

It would not be surprising to learn that Mr. Garner's supporters knew that Mr. Ickes was about to launch a third-term movement. If so, it was good strategy for them to throw the Vice President's hat into the ring before the Ickes statement was released. At any rate, the effect of the now extensive Garner-for-President movement is to make the Texan the spearhead of the opposition within the Democratic Party to a third-term nomination.

Does Mr. Ickes have the Vice President in mind when he declared, "this is no time for a candidate . . . whose claim to office consists of the traitorous knifing in the back of the commander in chief to whom he has sworn fealty?" Whether or not that remark was directed at any particular individual, it illustrates the bitterness which has already developed between the third-term and anti-third-term factions.

The effect of this controversy may be to strengthen the candidacy of Mr. Garner for the time being. But it is by no means certain that it will carry him any nearer to the nomination. As the spearhead against a third-term movement he is likely to attract a good deal of backing that would be lost when and if the President decides not to seek the nomination again. For even if the President steps aside, he will certainly have a strong voice in the selection of his successor. Moreover, the Democratic Party can scarcely be expected to select a nominee from a Southern State virtually certain to be in the Democratic column anyway.

So it appears that the chief significance of the present build-up for Mr. Garner is its probable influence on the third-term movement. Something more than a "picture-article" by Secretary Ickes will be needed to offset this determined drive on the part of the conservative wing of the Democratic Party. "Every poll," says the Secretary, "shows that the President retains the confidence of great masses of the people." But the polls to which he refers are based solely upon Mr. Roosevelt's popularity as a two-term President. The Gallup poll indicates that a very large majority of the voters are opposed to a third term for the President.

In trying to pooh-pooh the two-term tradition, Mr. Ickes points out that many prominent Republicans supported Theodore Roosevelt in 1912. But the first Roosevelt was not seeking a third nomination. He had been elected to the Presidency only once, although he had also served part of McKinley's second term. And if T. R.'s second race can be considered as a precedent for a third race on the part of the present Roosevelt, it is the more significant that it ended in complete failure.

In the absence of reasons far more compelling than those advanced by Mr. Ickes it is most improbable that the American people will discard the two-term tradition.

Through The Back Door

Senator Byrnes has further shaken the confidence of those who hoped that the decisive House vote last week could be regarded as the end of the Townsendism. If the Senator's plan to break down the present relationship between Federal and State contributions for old-age pensions should be adopted, it would give the Townsendites precisely the sort of opening wedge they are seeking.

At present the Social Security Board matches old-age allowances by the States on a 50-50 basis. Thus the system retains a very definite local character. States are not likely to promise extravagant benefits so long as their taxpayers are required to meet half of the bill. Senator Byrnes proposes, however, that the Federal Government increase its contribution to two-thirds of the total pension allowed in the poorer States.

Acceptance of that principle for some States would, of course, quickly lead to demands for its general application. The next step might easily be a wholly Federal system of old-age pensions, in order to equalize the differences of which Senator Byrnes complains. The Townsendites would then have only to bring about liberalization of Federal old-age benefits to arrive, by a delayed approach, at the goal they seek.

Senator Byrnes makes a good point against the Ways and Means Committee proposal to raise the maximum Federal contribution for the aged to $20 per month. That plan, he says, will benefit only the wealthier States able to match such payments dollar for dollar. States which can afford to contribute only $4 per capita for their indigent aged would continue paying $8 pensions. The gap between $8 and $40 pensions must be avoided. But the existence of this problem does not justify breaking down the safeguards against an extravagant all-Federal pensions system.

When the House begins debate on the proposed amendments to the Social Security Act today it must be alive to the very real danger of ushering in Townsendism through the back door.

Spotted Fever

The next three months are the ones in which inhabitants of Washington and its vicinity will be well advised to give some attention to the subject of a disease communicated to humans through the wood, or dog, tick.

Though the infected tick is comparatively rare, an average of eight or nine cases of the disease which it transmits have been reported to the local health department every year since 1930. Of these cases one out of three has proved fatal. Five cases, one fatal, have been reported already this year, indicating either an upward trend in the incidence of the malady, or more accurate diagnosis, or both.

Luckily there are effective precautions which can be easily taken against the disease. The virus, according to Dr. James G. Cumming, director of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases of the Department of Health, is acquired by the ticks from small rodents, but can also be transmitted to young ticks through the eggs. Complete control of spotted fever can, therefore, be approached through destruction of the animals which are responsible for it, mainly rabbits and field mice.

As eight hours of attachment and feeding are necessary before the spotted fever germ can be communicated, a simple personal method of prevention is to inspect the body and clothing twice a day whenever there is any question of exposure to ticks. Another method of infection is by penetration of the tick's blood through small cuts or scratches in the skin. This can be avoided by using forceps or tweezers in removing ticks, either from the person or from domestic animals.

When removed, says Dr. Cumming, the tick should be dropped into a can of kerosene or a carbolic acid solution. Iodine should be used to paint the spot of possible infection when the insect has already bitten its victim.

The Manton Aftermath

In addition to shocking the country, the Manton case has thrown the Federal courts of New York into unprecedented confusion. Since the jurist who was ranked second only to members of the Supreme Bench has been convicted of "selling justice" every individual against whom he handed down a judgment during the 21 years he sat on the bench is inclined to believe that an injustice may have been done. So New York is talking about a possible judicial inquiry into as many as 3,000 cases.

Obviously not all of the cases in which the former Judge Martin T. Manton sat can be reopened. But if any substantial number of decisions in which he participated are challenged, the Federal courts of New York will be confronted by a chaotic situation. In some cases where the judge was influenced by bribes from litigants it may be utterly impossible to unscramble the resulting mess with any assurance that justice is rendered.

The denouement of this tangle will be watched with interest. But the really significant reactions to this shocking event will come from the Department of Justice and the White House. For this is probably the most emphatic demand for the selection of only high-caliber jurists for the bench that the country has witnessed in many years.

Peaceful Picketing

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Five members of the Women's Trade Union League were arrested for singing while picketing the George Mason Hotel on the evening of May 23. They were arrested under a statute which makes it a serious offense to disturb a religious gathering. Such a meeting was taking place in the hotel at the time, but the picketers were not there because of the meeting and they did not know that their singing could be heard by the religious group.

When the case came up before Judge Duncan last Thursday morning the member of the religious gathering who had signed the warrant for the arrest requested that there be a continuance of the case rather than an immediate prosecution, since he hoped for a harmonious settlement of the question.

The disposition of the case by Judge Duncan deserves recognition as an impartial and just act performed in difficult circumstances and is a source of great encouragement to Alexandria residents who have been lending their efforts to early settlement of the strike.

As Alexandria members of the League of Women Shoppers, we have familiarized ourselves with the circumstances underlying the strike, and have supported the picketing in the belief that this is one of the means which must be taken to represent to the public the right of labor to a living wage, and to bargain collectively.

We are particularly grateful for Judge Duncan's public statement regarding the right to picket peacefully. It is sometimes necessary to reiterate these fundamental truths in order to clarify situations which have become obscured by personal feelings.

We believe it is highly important that these rights should be recognized, regardless of the opinions which may be privately held regarding the merits of a particular strike. PERSIS M. LANE.

Windsor

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial on the ill-timed broadcast of the little Duke of Windsor, which cringes to Hitler in every line, meets my hearty concurrence. Wars are horrible, it is true, but a dishonorable and enslaving peace may be worse. Mr. Chamberlain may have reached that conclusion in the light of what Hitler and Mussolini did to him at Munich.

"The Jewish Homeland"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Westbrook Pegler's observations on "The Jewish Homeland" in the May 29 issue of The Post, came as a distinct shock to many of his admiring readers, who have come to regard him as a refreshing and forthright commentator on important events of the day.

Particularly depressing were his callous and nonchalant references to the heroic little community of Jews in Palestine who have through the years faced danger, disease, and privation because they saw in Palestine the Christian world's answer to the wrongs and injustices that had been perpetrated against a helpless and defenseless people for 2,000 years. Is it unreasonable for these people to appeal to the conscience of the world when their freedom is threatened and they are faced with a ghetto life in their own homeland?

The irony of Mr. Pegler's remarks is brought into bolder relief by the realization that this community in Palestine has been drawn to a large extent from the same harassed and oppressed children of Nazi Germany over whom Mr. Pegler shed genuine tears only a few years ago. But that, of course, is a matter for Mr. Pegler to square with his conscience.

What we American Jews, who believe in the justice of the Zionist ideology, resent emphatically, is the challenge and the implication, skillfully shielded though it is, but permeating, nevertheless, Mr. Pegler's entire article, that Zionists cannot be loyal Americans. There is no factual basis for such an assertion. On theoretical grounds that challenge was exploded many years ago by Mr. Justice Brandeis in a pamphlet and entitled "The Jewish Problem and How to Solve It." Mr. Brandeis found no inconsistency between Zionism and patriotism.

And every American President from Wilson to Roosevelt has heartily indorsed the program of a Jewish National Home in Palestine and encouraged American Jews to aid in its upbuilding. In October, 1932, President Hoover said in part:

I have watched with genuine admiration the steady and unmistakable progress made in the rehabilitation of Palestine which, desolate for centuries, is now renewing its youth and vitality through the enthusiasm, hard work, and self-sacrifice of the Jewish pioneers, who toil there in a spirit of peace and social justice. It is very gratifying to note that American Jews, Zionists as well as non-Zionists, have rendered such splendid service to this cause which merits the sympathy and moral encouragement of everyone."

What more need be said to establish the fallacy of the charge that Zionism is inimical to the best interests of America?

But there is a greater claim upon the conscience of the Jews of America than the sympathetic attitudes of our Presidents. It is the obligation imposed upon the Jews of the world by the mandate itself, promulgated by the Council of the League of Nations and ratified by 52 nations of the world, including the unanimous indorsement of both houses of Congress of the United States (the Lodge-Fish resolution of June 30, 1922). Article 4 of the mandate provides as follows:

An appropriate Jewish agency shall be recognized as a public body for the purpose of advising and co-operating with the administration of Palestine . . . The Zionist organization, so long as its organization and constitution are in the opinion of the mandatory appropriate, shall be recognized as such agency. It shall take steps in consultation with his Britannic Majesty's government to secure the co-operation of all Jews who are willing to assist in the establishment of the Jewish National Home.

Thus through the instrumentality of the mandate, the Zionist organization was recognized as the political agency for mobilizing the support of world Jewery for the rebuilding of the National Home in Palestine. And many Jews of America who espoused and supported this cause did so in response to the obligation imposed on them by this mandate.

By what stretch of the imagination then can one be considered disloyal to America when he has fulfilled an obligation which his own Government has encouraged him to assume? A. L. S.

In Behalf Of Mr. Randolph

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The milk investigation, which in its ramifications has been far reaching, touches certain key-men who may be unjustly affected for the worse, if care is not taken to get the truth.

The front of Hon. Jennings Randolph's offending seems to be that he introduced men, all of whom were his constituents, living in his Congressional district, to District officials who had to do with paving our streets. The Congressman was within his rights, not to say his duty, when he did a perfectly legitimate and friendly thing for men who were his stanch friends. There is no evidence that the Congressman did more than bring together prospective seller and buyer, asking that the District officials do them justice in giving them whatever chance their commodity deserved to have as a District requirement. To construe Mr. Randolph's words concerning his wishing his friends good luck in their proposed deal could not be taken by any fair-minded man as using personal influence to prejudice the buyers against any other commodity.

Just how far a man who is chairman of the House District Committee has the moral right to go in behalf of his tried and true friends, will ever be a question. Much hypocrisy may be displayed here, in the face of well-known political favors by which men get into Cabinet positions as well as into less glamorous ones. Take away influence of friends "higher up" and you make Washington official life something of a deserted village.

The concern of Mr. Randolph's friends, however, centers about his proclamation that he will resign from his chairmanship and from the committee as a whole. This would do him no good, but harm; it would place his many friends and admirers in a humiliating position, and it would rob the city of a most efficient and popular "mayor."

McGehee Bill

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A fine example of the way our District government should not be run was given Thursday, June 1, at the House District Committee meeting. It was a perfect case of steam rollering. The McGehee bill to amend the District unemployment compensation act, HR 4533, was reported favorably without the public's being given a chance to appear at hearings on the bill.

Due to the tremendous threat of the bill to low income groups, several representatives of organizations had written in asking to be heard. Not one was notified of the hearings, which were mysteriously held without the customary notice being given.

The McGehee bill has several bad features. It calls for complete separation of the District Unemployment Compensation Board from the Social Security Board. It leaves benefits at a scale which Chairman Jennings Randolph has pointed out is one-quarter less than the national average. The Washington Women's Trade Union League will vigorously oppose this measure.

Chairman Randolph introduced on April 20 a much more liberal bill to amend the act. His bill called for a $7 minimum benefit where none exists now and raised the maximum to $18 in place of the $15 at present. The public was never informed of hearings on this bill which was supposedly discussed at the same time as the McGehee bill.

This action of the House District Committee is another strong argument for local suffrage for the District.

The Post Impressionist

"Baron Renfrew"

PERHAPS the most marked difference between the visits to the United States of King George and his grandfather, at the time Prince of Wales, and later Edward VII, is in the presentation of the news of those events. Almost the moment the sovereign touched his foot upon land newspapers all over the world had the flash. Subsequent editions carried wire photos giving the pictorial representation of the day's happenings. For about ten years before the Prince of Wales came some 30 companies were using Morse's telegraphic patents in our country and the year following his visit they were used in Europe. But the telegraphic reports were brief. Newspapers relied for details upon their special correspondents, and illustrated them in crude drawings.

In 1860 a charge of from $3 to $5 was made to view the parade in New York for "positions eligible for expansive crinolines." Another notable difference is in the faces of the men of the retinues of Baron Renfrew's suite, three had full beards, six had various kinds of side whiskers and only two, besides the prince, were clean shaven.

It was 79 years ago on June 4 that President Buchanan extended to Queen Victoria an invitation for her son to visit the United States while on this western continent. The Queen cordially agreed, signing herself "Your good friend, Victoria R." The prince left England July 10, arriving at St. John's, Newfoundland, July 25. Under the name of "Baron Renfrew" he entered the United States at Detroit, on September 20, and was in this country about 30 days instead of the brief span proposed for George and his Queen. While the prince made few stops he covered much space. He visited Chicago, St. Louis, Alton, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Philadelphia, New York, West Point, Albany, Boston and he sailed from Portland, Me. He made trips to some places near these cities, such as Harvard, Bunker Hill, Mount Vernon, etc.

Just as today people travel for many miles to see the King and Queen so in 1860 there was from the foggy banks of Newfoundland, along the borders of the St. Lawrence, Ottawa and Sangueney Rivers to the desolate regions of the Hudson Bay country keen excitement at the prospect of glimpsing the heir to the throne. The enthusiasm increased in "the States." I am reminded of an experience of my father in Scotland. Noting people hurrying in a certain direction he inquired the reason. "The Duke! the Duke!" was the only reply, with a wondering glance. The Duke of Edinburgh, brother of Edward VII, was visiting the city, and the inhabitants were rushing to see him. And my father followed them. Americans will do today as they did in 1860, except that police and soldiers will be better able to control them. From the time Baron Renfrew stepped on United States soil till he left crowds followed him. Americans are Americans but a prince is a prince, and especially is a king a king. I'll be on Pennsylvania avenue when George VI rides by!

On his visit Prince Albert, as will be that of the present sovereign, followed a routine very like his life in England. There were receptions, welcoming addresses, visits to certain "sights" such as grain elevators, the "hydraulic works," in Chicago, and the fair, at St. Louis. Perhaps he enjoyed himself most at the only small town in which he stopped over night—Dwight, Ill. He went there to hunt quail and prairie chickens, and proved himself a true shot.

Of his dancing there are conflicting reports. One writer, while admitting that "he is a good horseman, and able to do a thousand things that go to make up the finished gentleman," declared with emphasis that "the prince can't dance." An editorial writer taking that statement commented: "That shows the prince isn't much, for every fool in the United States can dance, or thinks he can dance, or could, with competent instruction be taught to dance." Yet at one dance the prince showed his innate gallantry, when he invited a daughter of the mayor, and finding she did not waltz, refused to take another partner but waited until the next quadrille. True he slipped and fell on the dance floor at one of the balls in Canada, but at his last ball in that country "he whispered soft nothings to the ladies as he passed them in the dance, directed the awkward how to go right and shook his finger at those who missed the figures."

Of course there were many odd things incidental to his visit. At one place a man made a determined effort to give him some turkeys. At another, a woman insisted she nursed him when a baby. At St. Louis, where no British flag could be found, a fake prince turned up and fooled a lot of the people. Many gifts came to him in Canada, of course, among them a Newfoundland dog and a canoe. Someone suggested a tomahawk and a buffalo.

Furniture used by him at some of the hotels was put up at auction. And one go-getting official was so urgent in his desire to introduce his wife to the prince that he pulled at the lapel of the Duke of Newcastle, saying: "Duke, Duke, this is my wife, niece of Colonel——, who was killed by the damned British." At another place an Irishman who made some slighting remark was cuffed by his neighbors.

The last thing the prince is reported to have said before going aboard his ship at Portland was, "Hurry, I'm cold!" By the time King George and Queen Elizabeth get to the end of their Western visit maybe they will be saying: "The royal crown cures not the headache." PAUL MOORE.

Fair Enough

Keeping Tom Busy

NOW IS THE TIME for all good friends of Mr. Tom Mooney to organize an international society dedicated to the work of keeping Warren K. Billings in prison. As long as Mr. Billings remains behind the bars in Folsom, Calif., Mr. Mooney will have an excuse to abstain from common toil, but the minute the forgotten man of the historic dynamiting case walks out of prison Mr. Mooney will become fair prey for any sinister character who wants to walk up to him and offer him a job.

It might be hard on Mr. Billings to stay in Folsom, but it would be worse on Mr. Mooney to let him out. Not only would Mr. Mooney be exposed to employment—an awful fate for one who had abandoned work in the literal and arduous meaning of the word long before the dynamiting—but he would lose the mission in life which enabled him to appear at public ceremonies and accept ovations. Mr. Billings should be willing to make this sacrifice for one so noble as Mr. Mooney.

Moreover, the defense business would go into a tailspin, for with Mooney and Billings both out of jail and earning a living there would be no further excuse for the collection of funds for the support of selfless Communist workers for the cause of justice in this particular case.

It was a sad day for the defense business when the State of California and the sometimes erratic but comparatively lenient American system of justice finally ejected Mr. Mooney himself from his status of distinguished guest in San Quentin Prison.

Mr. Mooney, in his passionate admiration for Tom Mooney, the nonworking friend of the American worker, had centered all the attention and publicity on himself, and the public had all but forgotten that Mr. Billings was in prison, too, and the victim of an outrage no less vile than the one of which Mr. Mooney claimed to be a victim.

Quick Thinking On Mooney's Part

IN HIS conversations at San Quentin, where he was allowed to hold press conferences and conduct an international propaganda through the Communists, Mr. Mooney rarely mentioned Mr. Billings, and when he was evicted by the American system of justice he was at a loss for a few minutes. But in this desperate situation Mr. Mooney thought fast and decided that it would be quite impossible for him to disappear into the obscurity of daily employment as long as Warren Billings remained in prison.

He became suddenly very much aware that there was such a man as Billings and pledged himself to the sacred task of getting him out. That is nice work, and Mr. Mooney enjoys it thoroughly, not only because it protects him from contact with the time clock and the ordinary routine of working stiffs but also because it affords him opportunities to accept ovations for Tom Mooney.

He once wrote that he had received "the highest tribute ever given a human being" when he returned to San Francisco, and the confession that he regarded himself as a human being was the most modest expression that he had uttered about Tom Mooney in years. It settled some doubts, too, because there were those who had gathered that he thought of himself as a god.

Mooney Almost Missed Ovation

MR. MOONEY almost missed an ovation arranged in his honor by Communists on his arrival in New York to continue the not too dreary work of agitating for the release of Mr. Billings. It appears that he got in a couple of hours too early and found that the ovation was not due to start until the arrival of a later train. But Mr. Mooney is not one to deny the Communists a longed-for opportunity to express their admiration of Tom Mooney, so he waited patiently and then descended to the train level, where he entered a rear car of the later train and emerged to accept the tribute.

This is not entirely new in the ovation line in New York, for pretty ladies and gentlemen of the moving picture business have staged arrivals in a similar manner and some are even said to have gone no farther than Yonkers to board trains and disembark, smiling for the cameras and the autograph fans, fresh from artistic triumphs in Hollywood.

For Mr. Mooney's own sake it is to be earnestly hoped that he will not overdo his campaign to free Warren K. Billings. For if he should use just a half degree too much pressure Mr. Billings also might be turned out as a further vindication of American justice, and Mr. Mooney would be up against a fate which to one so long unacquainted with toil except by hearsay would be hardly preferable to death.

Rigid Standards For NLRB Opposed By Edwin Smith

By the Associated Press.

Edwin S. Smith, National Labor Board member, told the Senate Labor Committee yesterday that he doubted there could be "any satisfactory legislative substitute for the discretion vested in the board" for settling collective bargaining disputes.

Smith contended that the matter of deciding whether craft unions or one big industrial union should represent employes in a particular plant was too complex a question for application of rigid standards.

Smith said he believed that the board's construction of the law had favored the A. F. of L. farther than the C. I. O. He said that on 12 occasions he had dissented from the majority decision of the board in cases involving contests between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O.

Today And Tomorrow

A Day At The World's Fair

ON THE WAY from Washington, with its political quarrels, to Europe, with its crises, I have at last managed to spend the better part of a day at the World's Fair in New York. That is not nearly a long enough time to see the fair. But it is time enough to see the point, which is that the human race is a collection of the most marvelous, ingenious and engaging idiots that ever got possession of a noble planet. Everything is on display, from instruments so precise that they will measure the pressure of a man's thumb on a steel rail to a regiment of perfectly formed human creatures — everything is there that demonstrates how, with his capacity for accuracy and beauty, man retains a preposterous incapacity to enjoy the fruits of his genius, to be as wise as he is intelligent, to be as good as he is great.

American Influence In Russian Exhibit

NO DOUBT each man will take away from this exposition that which he has brought to it and is prepared to see. I have come away thinking how little like the truth are the formulae which we dispute about and dignify by calling our ideologies. In the Russian building, for example, one may read on the walls all kinds of inscriptions announcing the birth of a social order different and better than any which has existed on earth. Yet, as proof, there are the exhibits which seek to convince the American crowds that Russia is now more American than America itself.

There is a room designed, somewhat unconvincingly I thought, to convince us that the dictatorship of Stalin is a democracy in which elected representatives wait to hear from their constituents and do not forget to kiss the babies. There are exhibits to show that Russia has constructed a Pittsburgh, and that in Moscow they are building an edifice which is somewhat like, though a little taller than, the Empire State Building, and that on top of it there is an energetic Lenin made of steel instead of a genial Al Smith made of flesh and bones. There is also a section of the new Moscow subway which combines the engineering skill of the B. M. T. with the decorative art invented by American manufacturers of bathroom fixtures.

So I came away from the Russian pavilion feeling that the influence of America on Russia was probably greater than the influence of Russia on America.

Italian Cascade Suggests Idea for Duce

AND THEN I visited the Italian pavilion, with its lovely cascade of cool water pouring down the facade, and I though how excellent it would be if Signor Mussolini and Count Ciano could stand under it and cool off and relax and remember that Rome, which was not built in a day, is the eternal city of Western man, to be guarded with reverence and exalted in magnanimity.

For all that is displayed elsewhere in this fair, the variety of man's interests and talents, the endless ingenuity and courage of his enterprises, will surely distract and destroy mankind if men cannot find once again that sense of the universal. In the particular, the allegiance to that which is catholic in that which is diverse, of which for more than 2,000 years Rome has been the center and the symbol.

Can Add And Subtract But Lack Equilibrium

THIS I FELT most strongly as I saw the truly splendid exhibits of American industrial technology. That incredibly magnificent box of tools cannot be used by men who, having learned to do the vector analysis in mathematical physics, are not yet able to add and subtract correctly in political economy; who can calculate the fineness of a machine to a millionth of an inch and cannot calculate a government budget within four billion dollars. For the reason why men cannot calculate well in their political economy is not that they really cannot add and subtract. It is because they do not have the moral unity with their fellows, and that moral equilibrium within themselves which would enable them, and permit them, to deal with their social life steadily and as a whole.

This undermines all their calculations. Moreover, it entangles them in the greatest of all their misunderstandings, the failure to realize that men are much more likely to be right in what they affirm than in what they deny, and much more likely to see the truth in that which they love than in that which they hate. I went, for example, to the General Motors Building. Surely it is as proud an exhibit as one could find of what men can achieve by private initiative, voluntary organization, individual leadership and the personal genius of scientists and inventors. And looking at it one might be disposed to say: This is what private enterprise can do, and the best that the Italians or the Russians have to show is no more than a feeble approximation to it.

Then one rides around and is shown the America of 1960 as Norman Belgeddes conceives it, an America where one problem at least, namely, the traffic problem, has been completely solved. And one realizes that this paradise of the motorist will have to be constructed not by private enterprise but by a public works administration.

General Motors has spent a small fortune to convince the American public that if it wishes to enjoy the full benefit of private enterprise in motor manufacture it will have to rebuild its cities and its highways by public enterprise. So one comes away feeling that men are right when they affirm the value of private enterprises and when they affirm the necessity of public enterprises; where they go wrong is in denying that both are necessary and that their collaboration is indispensable.

British Reveal Absence Of Vainglory

HAVING RESTED my legs and what remained of my mind at Billy Rose's Aquacade, I was ready for the British Empire. I may have missed a few of the dominions and a good many of the crown colonies, but nevertheless I saw enough to come away feeling that there is a lot of life in the old girl yet. In fact, it seemed to me that the inherent strength of Britain was most surely revealed in the good manners of the British exhibit, in the total absence of vainglory and of the desire, manifested elsewhere, to knock your eye out.

The British are exhibiting their tradition of political freedom with Magna Carta as the center. They are exhibiting their social reforms, showing not, as in some other pavilions, that all problems are solved but how much progress has been made in solving them. And the British are exhibiting very honest, and not at all showy goods that they manufacture. What they seem to be trying to say is that they cherish freedom and would like to work and to trade and to solve the unsolved problems of social living. I came away thinking that only the strong can be so modest and only the honest heart can be so quiet.

French Pavilion Is The Place To Eat

FILLED WITH these noble sentiments, conscious that I had missed Sweden, Czecho-Slovakia, Utah and Louisiana, it was nevertheless time for dinner. That took me to the French pavilion, of course, not only because French food is the best in the world but also because the French know better than anyone else how and where to eat their food. They eat like civilized men, and at the fair they have built a dining room where, if one can get into it, it is possible to eat and watch the fountains and the lights.

This is very correct, and it is very French. For after a man has seen all the energy of the human race and its enterprise and its effort, he should sit for a while and be comfortable and remember what the struggle is for and contemplate the colored waters which play in the cool of the evening.

Recovery Obstacles

By Mark Sullivan

Point To 1936

The Administration—or persons in it who frequently have their way—contemplate a new spending program. The purpose, they say, is to bring about a new business recovery. Their argument runs thus:

There was a business recovery in 1936. (This was the recovery that enabled Mr. Roosevelt, running for re-election in 1936, to say, exultantly, "Prosperity is coming back . . the train of American business is moving ahead.")

That early recovery, the spenders claim, was caused by the Government's large spending.

That recovery came to an end in early 1937. The reason it came to an end, so the spenders now argue, was that the Government curtailed its spending. So, they say, let's spend again and we shall recover again.

In all this, the central question is, just what did cause the ending of recovery in 1937? Was it the curtailment of spending? Or was it something else?

That the cause was the reduction of spending is a frequently accepted view, or fallacy. Recently Miss Dorothy Thompson wrote:

"I think there is no question—It is now generally agreed—that this depression (the one that began in 1937) was due to a curtailment of Government spending, plus other deflationary measures undertaken by the Government."

With all respect to Miss Thompson, it is not true that "there is no question" about the cause Miss Thompson assigns.

It is true that there was a coincidence. It is true that curtailment of Government spending did occur in early 1937. And it is true that the cessation of recovery came about that time. The coincidence is there.

Court Packing Plan Was A Factor

BUT THERE is another coincidence. And in this other coincidence will be found a reason why business recovery halted in 1937—and has continued to be halted ever since.

The ending of the business recovery occurred in March, 1937. That was the month of the drop registered by the stock market as an index of the future. Concrete effects of the ending of recovery did not appear until later, as is the rule.

The ending of recovery came in March, 1937. Let us look at some events that occurred just before. There are three.

Just a month before, on February 5, 1937, Mr. Roosevelt, in a deliberately sensational manner, sent to Congress his measure for changing the Supreme Court and the other Federal courts. That this was a shock to the country, everybody remembers.

About the same time, Mr. Roosevelt sent to Congress a measure for the reorganization of the Government departments. That measure—especially when a startled country read it in connection with the almost simultaneous court measure—again shocked the country.

About the same time, in January, 1937, there was seen in America, for the first time in a large way, a sit-down strike. The country saw sit-downers take possession of a General Motors plant in Flint, Mich., and hold it for 44 days. The country saw the courts order the sit-downers to leave the plant. The country saw the sheriff ask the Governor of the State, Mr. Murphy, for help to enforce the court's order. The country saw Gov. Murphy, instead of giving the help, call a conference between the sit-downers and the employer, a conference which ended by yielding to the sit-downers the point for which the sit-down had been started. The country saw this done by Gov. Murphy in understanding with President Roosevelt. And the country saw, ensuing, a wave of sit-down strikes.

Recession Came Short Time Later

THESE THREE events—the wave of sit-downs, the President's court measure and his Government reorganization measure—occurred in January and February, 1937. And in March, 1937, came the end of business recovery, the start of the recession that has lasted ever since.

Of the three causes, two have been ameliorated. The court measure was rejected in the Senate. The Government reorganization measure was stripped of its revolutionary features, and, as passed, is relatively innocuous.

There remains the matter of the sit-down strike—concretely, the attitude which the National Labor Relations Board takes toward the sit-down.

The Labor Board takes the position that it has power, in its discretion, to order employers to reinstate sit-downers. The board asserts this right in the most extreme type of sit-down. After sit-downers have seized a plant, after they have resisted law officers who ordered them to leave, after they have used violence in resistance; after they have been arrested, tried, convicted and served sentences for violation of law—after all that, the Labor Board asserts it has power to order employers to reinstate the sit-downers.

That the sit-down, with the court measure and the Government reorganization measure, caused the recession that began in 1937, is at least tenable. It is likewise tenable that recovery cannot be soundly resumed—whether by spending or without spending—so long as the attitude of the Labor Board about the sit-down remains.

Canada's Role

By Barnet Nover

Complexities Of Empire

ON WEDNESDAY, for the first time in history, a reigning British monarch will set foot on United States soil. But the point to be remembered is that George VI comes to this country not in his capacity as sovereign of Great Britain and Northern Ireland but as King of Canada. The visit, therefore, is primarily a neighborly act reflecting the peaceful and cordial relations that have long obtained between this Nation and its northern neighbor.

The distinction between King George VI as British monarch and King George VI as Canadian sovereign obviously involves an exercise in constitutional metaphysics. As an individual, King George as King of Canada cannot even for a moment divest himself of his other royal functions. He remains ruler of the United Kingdom, and Britain's overseas possessions, sovereign of Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, Emperor of India. The crown he wears is the symbol of authority throughout the British Empire and the British Commonwealth of Nations.

IN THE MIDDLE AGES, learned scholars loved to debate the number of angels that can sit on the point of a pin. King George VI is a monarch on whose head rests not one crown but many.

The problem of monarchy in the British realm is not simple, but complex. It can be said that there is practically no logic in the complicated system set up by the Statute of Westminster to create unity in diversity, to make a whole of independent parts. But this lack of logic does not necessarily make for weakness. The centrifugal tendencies in the British Commonwealth have resulted in the complete independence of the constituent elements.

As the statute describes them, the members of that Commonwealth are:

"Autonomous communities within the British Empire, equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs, though united by a common allegience to the crown and freely associated as members of the British Commonwealth of Nations."

THERE ARE also centripetal forces operating in the empire. A sense of common origin, an adherence to a common democratic way of life, a similarity of culture. And the symbol of this unity is the crown.

But what is this crown? Though worn, at this time by George VI, the possession of the crown gives the monarch no authority. The authority is exercised in his name by the sovereign people of the constituent parts of the Commonwealth and by their chosen representatives. Yet—and here again we have one of the curious paradoxes in which British constitutional practice abounds—the very lack of actual power which the monarch possesses makes him a far more effective rallying point for imperial unity than would be the case if he ruled as well as reigned.

GREAT BRITAIN at the moment is sorely beset. She is challenged at many vital points of her far-flung empire. Japan menaces vital imperial interests in the Far East, Italy in the Mediterranean, Germany in Europe. To meet that challenge, Great Britain has had to resort to revolutionary changes in her policy, expand her defenses beyond anything ever conceived of in peace time, unbalance her budget. But it is by no means certain that, despite all of these great efforts, she will be spared another war.

And if Great Britain is plunged into war, what then? The dominions are independent nations, their sole tangible link being the British crown. Will that link prove sufficiently strong to unite the forces of empire in the event of another major catastrophe?

THE ANSWER is that nobody knows. The dominions did come to the assistance of the mother country during the World War. But there is no legal compulsion upon them to do so again. As sovereign nations the decision rests with each of them to side with Great Britain or to remain neutral, as they see fit.

Actually the question of what the dominions will do in the event the mother country is forced into armed conflict is not new. It goes back many years before the statute of Westminster. As long ago as 1884, for instance, Sir John Macdonald, then premier of Canada, refused to lend Great Britain aid during the Khartum incident. And Sir Wilfred Laurier distinguished between the "life and death struggle" and the "secondary wars" of Great Britain. He argued that Canada was obliged to engage in the former but not in the latter. And it is an interesting fact that in his great speech of March 30, outlining Canadian foreign policy, Premier Mackenzie King never once committed Canada to participation in a European war on Britain's side. Canada's role, in the event of another world conflict, he indicated, would be decided at that time and not beforehand.

IN DEMONSTRATING the loyalty and affection entertained by the people of the Dominion for King George and Queen Elizabeth, the visit of the royal pair to Canada has proved of very considerable importance. It shows that the link with Great Britain, though made tenuous by law, remains strong in sentiment. The very stresses and strains to which the independent members of the British Commonwealth together with many other nations have been subjected during the present international crisis far from loosing the bonds that unite them has tended to tighten them. The British Commonwealth has demonstrated that there can be unity in diversity. And the symbol of that unity is the crown.

Vandenberg Hits Federal Control

Syracuse, N. Y., June 5.—Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, in a commencement address to the graduates of Syracuse University today, declared that the release of the American system of free enterprise from the bonds of "synthetic socialism" would lead to complete national recovery in six months.

Vandenberg, who last week signified his willingness to accept a Republican nomination of one term for President, warned that free enterprise cannot be restored under "restrictive laws which stifle initiative, penalize thrift, discourage aspiration, throttle investment, kill confidence and harness the thwarted activities of citizenship in the straitjacket of arbitrary government controls." He said a permanent conception of "Federal responsibility for the support of American citizenship, substituted for the historic conception of citizenship's support of our Federal Government, is the beginning of fascism or communism under the American flag."

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain.

'10 Minutes a Day Will Take 10 Years Off Figure,' Says Countess

WOMEN ARE ALWAYS agog when some celebrity noted for her youthful appearance turns out to have grown children. They instantly yearn to know how she does it and wonder if there isn't some mystery about her. Certainly the Countess Mara—Lucilla Mara De Vescovi, if you want it all—is just such a provocative personality, with her two grown daughters, her flair for style, her undeniable beauty, and her slim, youthful figure.

But the countess does not believe in mystery—she pins her faith to exercise and declares that suppleness is the whole secret of youth.

"Too many women," she says, "feel that a good and expensive foundation garment is all that is needed to retain a youthful figure. Such a garment is certainly important, but underneath there must be firm muscles."

Doesn't Mean Violence

That does not mean violent exercise, and it might be actually harmful for you to attempt the vigorous contortions intended for an athlete.

Since the countess is a designer and a very busy woman, her exercise time is necessarily limited and in order to be sure of getting her exercises into the day's schedule, she does them the first thing every morning. The routine is so simple and sensible that you may be impelled to adopt it as your own. If so, allow at least 10 minutes a day for the exercises. Countess Mara says, "Ten minutes a day can trim ten years off your figure!"

Begin arousing the circulation even before you hop out of bed. Remove the pillow so that you are lying flat on the back, hands close to the sides, palms down. Keeping the knee straight, raise the right leg to an angle of about 45 degrees, then lower and raise the left leg.

Do the next exercise on a mat or rug. Lie at full length, elbows bent and hands up about shoulder level in front. Roll completely over, first to one side, then back to the other side.

Threatline Exercise

For the poise that goes with a graceful carriage, this one is recommended: Stand with knees together, right foot slightly forward, hands on hips. Keep the right leg perfectly straight, and slowly bend the left knee and lower yourself to the floor. (Well, try it, anyway!) The trick is not to lose your balance. Now, place the left foot forward and repeat.

The most novel tip of all is an exercise for the throatline: Pretend that you are watching an airplane maneuver in the skies: raise the eyes upward, then turn the head to the far right, back to center, and to the far left.

Summer Jewelry for Varying Types

How to personalize the facetious new costume jewelry to one's individual type is illustrated above. Two ideas for the very young and gay are presented by Mrs. Edna Kuh, jewelry stylist, in the cheerful polka dotted clothes-pin strung on plastic chains as bracelet and necklace (lower left) and the jolly clown, with scarlet nose and wisps of comic hair, for wear on the lapel of suits or dark town frocks (lower right). At top is the brain child of another jewelry creator, Charlotte of Paris. The necklace and bracelet of mammoth bubbles of icy white and pastel are suitable for the slender girl with slim throat and wrists

Odd Baubles Now Decorate Stylish Women

Clothespins and Pop Bottles Are Used to Ornament Milady

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

CAN you imagine the lowly clothespin, painted with polka dots, and worn as a necklace by women of high style? Can you conceive the "pop bottle" top strung about your unsuspecting throat, rather than around the necks of ice-cool bottles of grape or orange? And children's wooden balls that once fashioned droll nursery dolls —would you believe it possible that the smartest women this summer are adopting them as the chef-d'oeuvre of their wardrobe?

MARSHALL ADAMS

These absurd, though witty steals from childhood days have been affected by a clever, resourceful jewelry stylist who recently visited Washington. "Crazy," she calls them, and their inspirations deserve her laughing description. At the same time, however, these crazy ideas in costume jewelry have become the hit of many smartly groomed women's ensembles this summer—

The stylist behind this revolution from the commonplace and stodgy in dress is Edna Kuh, a pretty young Englishwoman. She is traveling from State to State with her helpful hints for women of all ages and types, telling them what to wear and when to wear it in their costume jewelry selections.

Keyed to Emotions

Mrs. Kuh maintains that jewelry, like coiffures or swim suits, should be psychologically keyed to a woman's emotions—as each piece of jewelry reacts differently on each type of woman. "She used herself as a vivacious model when she slung a necklace of mammoth-sized wooden balls about her slender throat. They were hand-painted with funny childlike blurbs, and strung on a white patent cord. Undoubtedly they were aimed to strike the eye—and favorably—provided the wearer was tall, slim and correctly dressed for such an accessory note.

Mrs. Kuh recommended one of those basic dark linen or neat sheer frocks as a background intended not "to steal the thunder from the brilliantly hued necklace." She also suggested a hat with height, otherwise the big, heavy necklace would tend to make most women look short and squatty.

"Unlike the woman of willowy characteristics," Miss Kuh continued, "the woman of short, thick neck and features should concentrate upon longer, more graceful jewelry—necklaces, for instance, that lead the eye away from rolls of fat. Never should her throat or wrist be snugly bound, regardless of how much she favors a current mode."

Sweet Pea Necklace

Mrs. Kuh pointed out the virtues of a long, double-stranded sweet pea necklace of blown glass for this type. The cool, pink coloring, with the blue of the metal leaves and purple of the silken cord, proved that women minus swan-like necks need not sacrifice style for flattery. Also in Mrs. Kuh's bag of jewelry tricks were prankish lapel clips, for the woman who was too dumpy to wear even a necklace.

Aside from pottery, raffia, cotton, silk, tin, and chalk white compositions, used in her entertaining accessories, Mrs. Kuh stressed the importance of aluminum for featherweight bracelets and necklaces. These she suggested as chic with trim spectator sports frocks, but warned against wearing tailored jewelry with party frocks and vice versa.

Lifelike daisy chains and flower leis, too, were charming for feminine soft gowns, but their bloom should never be touched by contrasting them with hopsacking.

Mary Haworth's Mail

After Years of Living Abroad, Bachelor Settles in Washington; Asks How to Acquire Women Friends

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a bachelor in my late thirties and a comparative newcomer to Washington, where I expect to reside permanently. I am a member of the bar, although not practicing at present, and was formerly a secretary of embassy in the United States diplomatic service. I received several degrees from Columbia University, in my native city of New York. I have spent much of my life abroad and have no women friends in Washington. May I ask, therefore, if you will be so kind as to suggest how I might go about forming some feminine acquaintanceships? I shall appreciate the courtesy of a reply. Very sincerely yours,

BACHELOR.

DEAR BACHELOR: It seems to me that a former member of the diplomatic service should know rather better than another how to tie into the Washington social scene. Has it occurred to you to leave cards at the various embassies and legations, as one means of establishing social contacts which should lead automatically to acquaintanceship with personable women of comparable credentials?

And you must, of course, be eligible for membership in the University Club, and heaven only knows what other more or less exclusive clubs such as provide a favorite retreat for the substantial-citizen type of man, whose age is anywhere from 40 to 70 or more. It is this type of man who has, almost invariably, a host of unattached women in his background, such as sisters-in-law, sisters, nieces, cousins, women friends and acquaintances, and perhaps a charming secretary—any one of whom, I should think, would be delighted to meet a traveled, cultivated bachelor of presentable appearance and agreeable manner. (Or does that describe you?)

By making yourself known, in a modestly effective and leisurely way, to the right sort of men, you would be progressing indirectly to the desired goal of acquaintanceship with women of your own kind. Supposing you cannot afford club memberships at the moment, you have the alternative of affiliating yourself with the congregation, and men's group, of one of the local churches, and also of taking a hand in civic activities of various kinds.

The pleasant-mannered bachelor who has a lunching, golfing, bridge playing or cocktail hour acquaintanceship with assorted men of kindred spirit and comparable endowment can scarcely avoid meeting women, even if he would. Sooner or later he is going to be asked home to dinner, or for a country week-end, or for a Sunday afternon tea-fight, or to drop by the house for a drink and to meet the wife, or the mother, or the sister, etc. The same goes for the man who becomes a co-operative member of a men's church group; or a dependable moral supporter of some civic enterprise.

There is no sleight-of-hand solution of the problem of making the right sort of friends among the opposite sex, in a strange community. If it is to be well and wisely done, it must be negotiated in a dignified and leisurely manner. Yet it seems to me that a man of your background would immediately adopt the letters-of-introduction method, among others.

Surely you must know, either abroad or in New York, persons who would be happy to supply you with letters to friends or relatives of theirs in Washington. If you don't, then your current lack of friends in Washington must be construed as a reflection, or continuance, of an habitual lack. And in that case, you would be doubly wise to employ the tried - and - true, slow - moving methods outlined above. Friends don't appear like manna from heaven. They are the handwrought product of devoted effort. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Do You Suffer from Mantel Mania?

asks "Mary Annette," Decorating Hostess of The Hecht Co.

So many women who cleverly create a perfect decorative scheme in their homes, fall down hopelessly when it comes to their mantel arrangement, thus spoiling an otherwise perfect picture. They feel that the attractive Della Robbia vase picked up on their last trip to Italy is so good looking that they must place it on the mantel of their Early American living room, or maybe it's the clock received as a wedding present—very handsome and a good timepiece—but absolutely murderous in a Colonial setting. For the Early American ensemble, the mantel should be of maple, brick or stone, with a Currier and Ives print, or a Sampler, or a maple framed mirror. Severe and simple ornaments should be used, such as a row of pewter mugs or plates, or plain brass candlesticks and a wood "steeple" clock. An 18th Century mantel should be painted white, and could be decorated with a Lowescroft bowl, or a group of Staffordshire figurines, flanked with a pair of silver, or brass or prism candlesticks, or crystal hurricane globes. Simplicity should be the keynote of the modern mantel, preferably of painted wood, with ornaments of crystal and metal, cylindrical or square, or a collection of modern figures. Over the mantel should hang an unframed mirror or a modern painting.

Bigger and Better Weddings

THE widespread report that Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey, founder and president of the Do Something About It League, was planning a complete renovation of June weddings was corroborated by Mrs. DeGoofey yesterday at her press conference.

Mrs. De Goofey

"But please understand I am NOT reforming weddings," cautioned the celebrated crusader. "Rather, I am improving them. For years I had hopes of suppressing all large public weddings, but women being what they are, I see that is hopeless. Now, I merely plan to reorganize them."

"Do you mean that you are going to simplify them?" asked a society reporter.

"No, indeed! Did you ever hear of a wedding that was otherwise than simple? Certainly not! Even if there are 20 bridesmaids, 10 flower girls and a dancing pavilion big enough to house a circus, the wedding is always (beautifully simple). No, what I intend to do is to make weddings bigger and jazzier. More fun for the money is my motto."

"Just what do you mean by that?" asked a British journalist.

"I mean that wedding guests, as a rule, don't get their money's worth. They virtually bankrupt themselves sending silver platters, tea wagons and tablecloths and then they witness a show that lasts only about 15 minutes. What is worse, they don't even get a good look at the bridal gown. Now here is what I propose:

Bridegroom on Exhibition

"First, have a large wooden promenade, such as is used in fashion shows, and following the ceremony have the bride and her attendants walk up and down this several times modeling their gowns. I would also have the bridegroom parade on the platform for inspection.

"Second, if the event is held outdoors I would have some lively entertainment for the guests preceding the ceremony, possibly some barefoot dancers if the event is highbrow, or some performing dogs, gymnasts, magicians, etc., if a more popular appeal is desired.

"Third, I would have the ceremony performed on a raised platform and bleacher seats be provided for the spectators. I would also have a radio amplifier for the kiss in the big clinch."

"What about the delicate problem of wedding gifts, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a shopping columnist.

"I am going to take the delicacy entirely out of the problem," was the reply. "I am going to put it on a sensible, commercial basis. For instance, I am going to abolish bridal showers entirely so that the bride's friends won't have to divide their funds among a lot of knickknacks, but can apply it all on good substantial wedding presents. Then, in order to prevent duplications of gifts, and to save the buyers worry, I am going to have the prospective bride make a complete list of the things she wants and signify with each invitation just what she expects that guest to send—salad bowl, pickle fork, bonbon dish or whatnot. Just think of the headaches that will eliminate!

Prices of Gifts Made Public

"Finally, I am going to require that on the day of the wedding all the presents be prominently displayed, together with the cards of the senders and the prices of the articles. That will make the exhibit more interesting and save a lot of speculating."

"Will you do anything about bridegrooms?" asked a man's page editor.

"Yes, I shall require that a sheet of information containing the bridegroom's age, height, weight, occupation, salary, etc., together with his complete genealogical chart, be mailed with each invitation. That will equip the guests to enjoy the wedding better. The genealogical angle is particularly important in Washington because I am told that so many bridegrooms are frequently confused with their grandfathers in pre-wedding comment."

"Is the report true, Mrs. DeGoofey, that you are going to establish an age limit for bridal couples in public weddings?" asked a crime reporter.

"No, indeed! In fact, the older the couple, the bigger the wedding, is my idea."

"What about divorced brides and bridegrooms?" asked a gossip columnist.

"I am in favor of their making the biggest splurge of all. Why not? A first wedding is no particular achievement, but a second or third one—ah, that is something to make a show about. And besides, think of the fun for the guests!"

Vitamins Needed In Daily Diet for Beauty's Sake

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor.

VITALITY AND VITAMINS which seem to go together as ideal beauty twins are dependent on the diet. As harbingers of good complexions, bright eyes and lustrous hair, the daily diet should include the vitamins and minerals provided by dairy products that are natural aids of both health and beauty.

Experiments by the Federal Bureau of Home Economics indicate that people who live on a diet deficient in vitamin A are subject to night blindness. Milk supplies this vitamin in large amounts. Vitamin A is necessary to the health and vigor of all tissues of the body. Vitamin B and G are also contained in milk. Vitamin B controls the appetite and affects the digestion of foods, and vitamin G has its influence on the nerves and digestion and its resistance-building qualities. It is well to include these "protective foods" daily in the diet.

Buttermilk with its acid taste is agreeable to many people, and besides making a refreshing drink it finds favor when made into a sherbet.

Buttermilk Sherbet

Combine 2 cups buttermilk with ½ cup sugar and 1 cup crushed pineapple. Freeze these ingredients until they are the consistency of mush. Place them in a chilled bowl. Add 1 egg white unbeaten and 1½ teaspoons vanilla. Beat the sherbet until it is light and fluffy. Preplace in the refrigerator tray and freeze until it is firm. Stir frequently. Serves 6.

Advertising to Appeal to Father, Is Urged; Women Get All the Breaks There Now

SINCE IN A COUPLE of Sundays we celebrate Father's Day, which no doubt was originally founded to give the old gentleman an even break with his alleged better half, I have given long and devoted thought to what to say on the occasion. Now I have decided that the best thing I can do for Father is to urge that he be considered a factor in the advertising world.

ALICE HUGHES

Read the advertisements and what do you find? Practically all the appeal is made to women, whatever the product advertised. This technique was founded on a sane enough basis, since the figure men tell us is that women do 85 per cent of our country's buying. But I am afraid that original strength is becoming a weakness. I believe that the historical balance of the sexes remains true to this day—that women want and expect leadership from men. If they don't get it, they take advantage of his lowered guard.

I think one of the nicest things we could do for Father this year would be to give a more masculine appeal to all advertising copy, especially to that which pertains to his personal wearing apparel. I should even go a step farther. I'd relax the constant vigilance which so many of us keep over his wardrobe, and if the poor darling wants a bright little item that doesn't quite jibe with our notions of good taste, I'd stretch several points and let him have it. Let's never forget that he is Father, and the head of the house, whatever we may think in our brasher moments. Let's give the dear old thing a break!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN: I think that of all the recent dates I'd rather have kept would have been one at the Quintuplets' birthday party. That must have been a circus, coming as it did immediately after their startling visit to Toronto. I liked best of all the puzzling touch of an American rabbit's foot for good luck . . .

Most interesting romance of the week here took place at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, where for the first time in its history a wedding was solemnized in the quarters of the captain-commandant. The bride, Miss Helen Penn, 20, the Captain's daughter, and Lieut. Robert W. Page, jr., 25, who will graduate from West Point this month—thus uniting the services in a most romantic way. What gives zip to the story is the fact that the wedding is the climax of a blind date two years ago . . .

Two of the best known and most interesting local girls who combine marriage and career with great success are Eleanor Lambert and Peggy Le Boutillier. Strangely enough, both are now racing toward motherhood. I call them by their maiden names, but they are also well known as Mrs. Seymour Berkson and Mrs. Bronson Williams, in the order named.

AT LAST GEORGE Jessel, who as you know is married to Norma Talmadge, has succeeded in opening his three-acre section of the Fair called "Little Old New York," and awakened many warm memories in the hearts of our oldtimers. The area contains all kinds of fun and people you may remember, among them the little Ziegfeld charmer named Ann Pennington, who was famous in the old "Follies" days for her dimpled knees. The dimples may have filled out, but Ann is still plenty cute, and worth a look . . .

Pelenyis Introduce Buday Prints, Beautiful Home to Capital Society

Perfect Day Gives Guests Chance to Roam About Estate Arthur O'Brien Used to Call 'My Little Place in the Suburbs'

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

ALTHOUGH THE ARTIST himself was not present, George Buday's woodcuts had the best possible introduction to Washington yesterday when Mme. Pelenyi, wife of the Hungarian Minister, entertained at a large reception from 5 to 7 o'clock.

Arranged on a wall of the huge drawing room, the pictures attracted much favorable attention as guests stopped to see them both on the way out to the garden and again before bidding the hostess good-by. The exhibition marked the first time Mr. Buday's work has been shown in Washington, although they have received favorable comment all over the world. A native of Hungary, the 32-year-old artist is now in London, where he is studying graphic arts and art collections at the British Museum. His prints yesterday included illustrations of Hungarian folk tales and ballads, the life of Christ, and selected international prize winners.

If Mme. Pelenyi had made special arrangements with the weatherman, the day could not have been more suitable for a party that was both an indoor and al fresco affair. Tables were set up here and there on the terrace and the rolling lawn with its neat beds of pansies, larkspur and roses. Chairs were invitingly placed on the sun porches and in the spacious dining room. But most guests chose to wander about the grounds rather than to linger anywhere for long. There was so much to see and so many people to talk to before 7 o'clock rolled around.

The estate that Arthur O'Brien used to refer to as "my little place in the suburbs" is one of the loveliest in all Washington. Magnificent trees and a sweeping lawn that is up-hill and down-dale affair leading off to all sorts of leafy nooks, as well as to a swimming pool and a tennis court fenced with climbing roses, are only a few of the items that make it one of the Capital's show places.

A BLACK-UNIFORMED major domo who looked as if he might have stepped out of the pages of "Graustark" directed the long line of guests to the drawing room where Mme. Pelenyi received. She wore a floor-length frock of figured crepe featuring blooms of purple and blue with green accents on white background. Standing with her during the latter half of the party was her sister, Mrs. Donald McBride, of Cleveland, who is here for a brief visit. Mrs. McBride wore a white semitailored crepe frock with a matching turban.

While his wife greeted the guests, the Hungarian Minister mingled in the crowd on the terrace, in the sunroom, and the dining room, moving from group to group with the skill characteristic of all superb hosts.

In contrast to most large receptions in diplomatic households, yesterday's drew more residentials than officials and more eave dwellers than newcomers, either foreign or domestic.

ON THE SUNPORCH: George T. Summerlin, the State Department's chief of protocol, answering question after question about the forthcoming visit of the King and Queen. He will be off tonight for the Canadian border to meet Their Majesties . . . With him at the party, his daughter-in-law, pretty Mrs. George T. About The Town

No Guest Register Has Been Provided For Those at Royal Garden Party

FURTHER NOTES on The Visit:

Leaving cards on royalty is tabu—instead, those who have been presented at court or who have dined with Their Majesties go around the next day and sign their names in a book kept just for that purpose. Sticklers wise in the ways of royal etiquette are wondering if the White House and British Embassy will provide such a book, as did the Danish Minister at the recent reception for his Crown Prince and Crown Princess, when guests were asked to inscribe their signatures in a leather-bound volume in lieu of dropping cards. The Social Bureau at the Executive Mansion says it hasn't heard of any such arrangements, and the British Embassy explains that for Their Majesties' dinner there, anyway, a call later will not be necessary as the couple will leave town that same evening.

Ladies presented at Buckingham Palace frequently worry about going through the ceremony with a shiny nose, as they are not permitted to bring their handbags into the palace. Also, all presentees have to arrive with both a chauffeur and a footman on the front seat. Fortunately, these rules don't apply to the garden party on Thursday.

THE SIMPLY furnished rooms which will probably be assigned to Their Majesties at Hyde Park are in striking contrast, judging by recently published photographs, to the magnificent suites they occupied at the Quai d'Orsay on last summer's visit to the French capital, when beautiful pictures were borrowed from the Louvre and the finest tapestries collected for the occasion. But according to a member of the British Embassy, the Paris visit was a full state one, and the King was accompanied by an enormous retinue, whereas this time there's no foreign office representative with the royal couple, and their call on the President falls into a different category. This particular embassy aide thinks Hyde Park is a charming residence, and maintains that royalty won't care about magnificence just so the beds are comfortable.

The trouble which the slightest deviation from the carefully planned royal schedule can cause was told to us by a friend who was in Quebec when the King and Queen arrived there two days late, owing to storms at sea. He says that $3,000 worth of flowers wilted in the interim, and that feminine members of society who had made hairdressing appointments at just the proper time went wild with grief because they had to postpone them and then found that all the available time left was already taken.

Nothing is more typically "Washington" than the small cocktail parties held in gardens here during the Spring nad summer. Yesterday a popular Georgetown couple who prefer to be anonymous entertained at such a one in what the hostess, with too much modesty, insists on calling simply a "back yard." But the guests who sat contentedly drinking mint juleps were full of admiration for the small lawn, inclosed on one side by a high wall overgrown with ivy, the rose bushes, and the hollyhocks which line the grassy borders.

"Among those present"; Edward Finkenstaedt, whose appearances at such affairs is rare, and who told us that Mrs. Finkenstaedt is in New York taking their ten-year-old daughter around the Fair; Marian Trumbull and Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins sitting on a bench with Baron Baeyens, and Count and Countess de Gramont also representing the French Ambassy.

MRS. ANTHONY COLEBY was telling friends about her recent flight to the West Coast with Commander Coleby. Others present included Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock, who will leave the day after the royal garden party for their summer home in Newport; Clarence Hewes, who joins the exodus shortly afterward and will spend the summer at his London house and on the continent; Mrs. Walter White, who, beautifully gotten up, alighted from Julepdale, her station wagon; John Paulding Brown, Dick Gamble, Mrs. William MacCracken, Mrs. John Beardall, in a becoming green print, Mrs. Melvin Hall, and many others.

Another cocktail party yesterday was that given by Mrs. Truxtun Beale.

SOME "DAUGHTERS" and others who have not been asked to attend the garden party on Thursday will not be left without diversion, as Miss Anne Moorhead, daughter of Mrs. Howell Moorhead, has cards out for a garden affair that same afternoon . . . Mrs. Ogden Mills arrives the middle of the week for several days here . . . Luigi Balzini, whose father owns the biggest Italian newspaper published in this country, is spending a few days in Washington. He was one of two newspapermen who were passengers on the ill-fated Panay when it was sunk by Japanese planes . . . William McComb will give a garden party tomorrow in honor of Miss Eleanor Fahey and Gerard Reilly, solicitors of the Labor Department, whose engagement was recently announced. The party will take place at the Georgetown home which Mr. McComb and Mr. Reilly share . . . Myron Hofer will entertain at dinner tomorrow . . . Smith and DeLong Bowman have cards out for a lawn tea Sunday at their place in Sunset Hills, Va.

Miss Boykin Honors Aides

The climax in a series of parties preceding today's wedding of Miss Frances Boykin to Riley Smith was a luncheon yesterday at the Congressional Club at which the bride-elect was hostess.

Wearing a white dress with red and blue trimming Miss Boykin entertained her matron of honor and the young ladies who will assist at the wedding reception which will also take place at the Congressional Club.

Those present at the luncheon included Mrs. Paul Bryant, the matron of honor; Mrs. James Hugh Nelson, Miss Betty Jensen, Miss Fanchon Aldrich, Miss Amrah Fortune, Miss Gladys Kitchens, Miss Nancy Shaw, Miss Reba Doughton, Miss Mary Maud Moss, Mrs. Donald Adams, Mrs. Charles Malone, Mrs. Roy Spaulding and Miss Reuben Carlson.

Miss Reba Doughton entertained in honor of Miss Boykin at a breakfast Sunday at the apartment of Representative and Mrs. Robert L. Doughton at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Guests were Representative and Mrs. Frank Boykin, parents of the bride-to-be; Representative and Mrs. Doughton, Judge and Mrs. Finis Garrett, Riley Smith, the prospective bridegroom, and close friends of his fiancee.

The marriage will be performed at Christ Church, Alexandria.

Stephanson Wedding Held

St. Matthew's Church yesterday was the scene of the marriage of Miss Chrysanthy Jeanne Stephanson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Charles Stephanson, and Vincent Bernard Terminello, formerly of Boston and now of Washington. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Terminello, of Boston.

The Rev. John Argaut officiated at the 7 o'clock ceremony. A white mousseline de soie was chosen by the bride, who carried bouquet of calla lilies and lillies of the valley. Mrs. Mary McKeever was matron of honor, and Patricia Anne McKeever, niece of the bride, flower girl.

Paul G. Santos, of New York, was best man. Following the wedding, there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents, and later the couple left on their honeymoon trip. They will make their home here at 1121 New Hampshire avenue.

In New York

Mrs. Povilas Zadeikis, wife of the Lithuanian Minister, is in New York City where she will attend this evening the farewell dinner in honor of Miss Madeline Avietenaite, Commissioner General of the Lithuanian group at the World's Fair in New York. Miss Avietenaite will sail for her home this coming week-end.

Little Girls to 'Adopt' 1,000 Dolls at 3 Teas

Woman's Council to Turn Headquarters Of Federation of Churches Into a Toyland; Mrs. Ross to Preside at Party Tomorrow

By Jesse Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Headquarters of the Washington Federation of Churches, 1749 N street, will be transformed into a little girls' toyland for the next three days. This season, at least, the Woman's Council, of which Mrs. Frank A. Linzel is president, is sponsoring doll teas for the "doll adoption" project of the Juvenile Court department.

Nearly 1,000 dolls were brought to the teas last year, and as many more are expected this season. The church women in most cases dress them by hand. Mrs. R. A. Sauer, who succeeded Mrs. Thomas Howerton as chairman of the Juvenile Court department of the Woman's Council, and Miss Etta Mai Russell, Juvenile Court worker who originated the plan in Washington, are in charge.

The teas are to be tomorrow, Thursday and Friday from 3 to 8 o'clock. Mrs. George Ross, vice president of the Woman's Council, is chairman tomorrow; Mrs. W. O. Tufts Thursday and Mrs. Howerton Friday. The ministers' wives of the churches in the Washington federation are presiding at the tables. Those who will pour include Mrs. G. E. Schnabel, Mrs. S. B. Daugherty, Mrs. Grace S. Lowery, Mrs. C. C. Hung, Mrs. J. A. Trader, Mrs. Leslie Bowers, Mrs. M. S. White, Mrs. F. B. Harris, Mrs. Harry Burgan, Mrs. Horace A. Cromer, Mrs. Oscar F. Blackwelder, Mrs. C. C. Rasmussen, Mrs. Luther J. Frantz, Mrs. H. S. Anderson, Mrs. J. H. Hollister, Mrs. J. B. Kelly, Mrs. Virgil Cosby, Mrs. J. G. Armstrong, Mrs. J. Teller Cocke, Mrs. Bernard Braskamp, Mrs. E. A. Lemoine and Mrs. O. J. Hart.

Gave Dolls Time To Get New Dresses

The invitations to the teas were sent out far enough in advance so the dolls could be properly dressed for the occasion. It was requested that they be not more than 10 or 12 inches high. Some of the children who receive them are quite young and small dolls are easier to handle than large ones.

Long tables will be arranged on the second floor of the building and, at the end of the three teas, will be covered with smiling dolls of all descriptions. These will be distributed to children of needy families—not given like ordinary toys, but placed in the care of the little girls as foster babies would be. Each child will sign the doll adoption code, promising to be a good mother who keeps her child clean, sews for her, keeps her clothes clean and keeps the house clean. In this way the project sows the seeds of home-making in the children while it provides them with playthings for the summer months.

One child who received a doll last year recently wrote a letter telling how she had been taking a neighbor child to nursery school in order to earn 10 cents to buy material for a new dress for her doll. A second letter explained, "I have displaced me 10 cents I had for the goods. I would appreceate it very much if you would get me a yard of goods until I get the 10 cents to pay you. I have to go to the hospital to get my tonsils out and I want to sew for my doll while I am there."

New Personages Added to Collection

In addition to the dolls brought to be given to the children, additional characters will be added this year to the permanent collection started by Miss Russell to add to the interest of the teas and to be used for exhibition. Dolls have been dressed to represent the Presidents' wives whose gowns are in the Smithsonian Institution. Among those included will be a "Mrs. Coolidge" doll, presented by Miss Russell and dressed by Miss Mabel Strider; "Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt," presented by Mrs. Linzel and dressed by Mrs. Donald Carpenter, Mrs. Marion Maddox, Mrs. Elmer E. Metts and Mrs. Walter Demahan; "Mrs. Grant" and "Nellie Grant" dolls, lent by Mrs. Francis Browne, whose grandmother dressed them during President Grant's administration; "Mrs. Grover Cleveland," presented by Mrs. E. V. Pugh, former president of the Woman's Council and dressed by her mother; "Mrs. Van Buren," presented by Mrs. Marjorie Williams and dressed by Mrs. Robert Neely; "Mrs. Lincoln," presented by Judge Fay Bentley of the Juvenile Court and dressed by Mrs. Mary Wingate; "Mrs. Woodrow Wilson," presented by Miss Marguerite Griffin and dressed by Mrs. H. S. Wright; "Martha Washington," presented by Miss A. Barbara Wiegand and dressed by the art department of Barney Neighborhood House.

There is also a doll representing Mrs. Linzel, as council president, which has been dressed by the art department of Barney Neighborhood House.

Chamberlain Promises Open Thetis Inquiry

Gives Commons Official Story of Submarine Tragedy

By the Associated Press.

London, June 5.—A "full public inquiry" into the sinking of the submarine Thetis was promised by Prime Minister Chamberlain today in the House of Commons, when he gave the puzzled British public an official account of the disaster.

He said that "so far as can be ascertained" the sinking of the Thetis last Thursday with loss of 99 of 103 men aboard "was caused by flooding of the two forward compartments through one of the bow torpedo tubes.

"The rear door of one of these tubes," he added, "came open or was thrown open through reasons which cannot be fully explained."

In the face of criticism of the fact that the 103 men aboard the Thetis were approximately double the craft's normal complement, Chamberlain asserted the presence of builders' representatives and others "normally carried" in such acceptance trials "in no way contributed to the sinking of the submarine."

Chamberlain told the following story of the accident:

The Thetis, carrying out acceptance trials in Liverpool Bay and accompanied by a tug belonging to the builders, dived at 1:40 p. m. Thursday for three hours and failed to reappear at the appointed time.

"It is evident," Chamberlain said, "that the accident occurred while the vessel was submerged."

After telling of the flooding of the two forward compartments through the torpedo tube, Chamberlain said the main ballast tanks were emptied, but the submarine continued to dive, hitting the bottom at an angle of 35 degrees at 130 feet.

She came to rest on an even keel, but "the impact on the bottom destroyed the vessel's signalling apparatus and she was unable to communicate with surface vessels."

Buoys Pass Unnoticed

Marker buoys and smoke floats were sent up, "but these were not observed by the escorting tug, which had followed the expected course of the submarine." Measures were taken to lighten the craft, and the tail came up above the surface at daylight on Friday.

The navy and the royal air force began a search and the destroyer Brazen located the submarine at 7:54 a. m. Friday.

Four men escaped with the Davis lung, including Capt. H. P. K. Oram, who reported that conditions aboard the Thetis at that time "were becoming bad, but that all on board were still alive."

A diver was sent down as soon as possible "and he had great difficulty in working." At 12:40 p. m. an attempt was made "to get the stern still higher above water." The attempt was unsuccessful, the cables breaking.

"An attempt to cut a hole in the stern in its then position," said Chamberlain, "would have involved a risk of flooding which was quite unjustifiable."

"On receipt of the report of a doctor who attended the survivors that their condition was grave from carbon monoxide poisoning," the prime minister said, a further attempt to raise the stern during slack water was made, but this was again unsuccessful as the stern of the vessel was becoming less buoyant."

Shortly before 7:15 p. m. Friday a cable was placed around the submarine and a camel (a pontoon) was placed in position, "but the wire slipped the wrong way, at the same time cutting away the indicator buoy. The submarine was relocated at approximately 11 p. m.

Diver Reported Tapping

"In view of the report by a diver that he thought he had heard tapping inside the submarine, efforts were made to try to pump air into a compartment, but it was found that this operation could not be undertaken in time to save the lives and the attempt was abandoned.

"It was now clear that any further possibility of saving lives must be abandoned and the task of salvaging the vessel was proceeded with."

High Court Voids HagueMeeting Ban

no other purpose in the attempted Jersey meetings than peaceable discussion of the labor relations act, and Roberts narrowed the issue to that question.

Holds Ordinance Void

He held the Jersey City ordinance, requiring a permit to hold meetings in streets and parks, "void upon its face" because it can "be made the instrument of arbitrary suppression of free expression of views on national affairs . . ." Roberts based his opinion on the "privileges and immunities" clause of the Constitution, limited to citizenship rights.

But Justice Stone took the broader view, "that freedom of speech and of assembly for any lawful purpose are rights of personal liberty secured to all persons, without regard to citizenship, by the due process clause of the Constitution."

Agreeing with Roberts in sustaining with slight modifications the lower court decree, Stone said he was "unable to follow the path by which some of my brethren have attained that end."

He said the court has never held either freedom of speech or of assembly "is a privilege or immunity peculiar to citizenship of the United States, to which alone the privileges and immunities clause refers."

"No more grave and important issue can be brought to this court than that of freedom of speech and assembly, which the due process clause guarantees to all persons regardless of their citizenship, but which the privileges and immunities clause secures only to citizens and then only to the limited extent that their relationship to the National Government is affected," said Stone.

"I am unable to rest decision here on the assertion, which I think the record fails to support, that respondents must depend upon their limited privileges as citizens of the United States in order to sustain their cause, or upon so palpable an avoidance of the real issue in the case, which respondents have raised by their pleadings and sustained by their proof."

Stone contended lower courts made no finding that the C. I. O. meetings were called to discuss only the labor relations act and declared "it is enough that petitioners from holding meetings and disseminating information whether for the organization of labor unions or for any other lawful purpose."

Justice Black concurred in Robert's reasoning, while Justice Reed sided with Stone. Justices Frankfurter and Douglas did not participate in the case. Chief Justice Hughes concurred in the result of the Roberts ruling voiding the Jersey City decree. Hughes said he agreed with Roberts "as to the right to discuss the national labor relations act being a privilege of a citizen of the United States, but I am not satisfied that the record adequately supports the resting of jurisdiction upon that ground. As to that matter, I concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice Stone."

Siding with Hague, Justice McReynolds said the lower court "should have refused to interfere by injunction with the essential rights of the municipality to control its own parks and streets," which he said was beyond jurisdiction of the Federal courts. Justice Butler denied that the Jersey City ordinance was "void on its face" and said the lower court action should be reversed.

Dating from a C. I. O. membership drive in Jersey City, when C. I. O. sympathizers were barred or removed from the city, the litigation began with an injunction obtained by the C. I. O. and the American Civil Liberties Union November 7, 1933, from the Federal District Court for New Jersey. Hague appealed to the Circuit Court, which sustained the injunction, and further held there was no right to deny a permit for a meeting because disorder was feared.

Justice Roberts said in his opinion that streets and parks "have immemorially been held in trust for the use of the public and, time out of mind, have been used for purposes of assembly, communicating thoughts between citizens, and discussing public questions."

As Hague officials in Jersey City said the court's finding would be "implicitly" followed, Norman Thomas, Socialist party leader, announced in New York that the American Civil Liberties Union and others will hold a mass meeting in Jersey City Friday "to see whether Hague has the will and power to enforce the law." Thomas, who himself was hurried out of town last year by Jersey City police, said the meeting will be held in Journal Square, the scene of his own ousting.

through the Capital was doubled yesterday when the State Department authorized advance announcement of the route to be taken by the visitors at 4:45 p. m., Thursday, when they leave the White House for the British Embassy.

Emerging from the White House grounds at the southwest gate, the royal motorcade will proceed north on Seventeenth street to Connecticut avenue, past smart shops, restaurants, hotels and apartments.

At Dupont Circle the King and Queen will share a prerogative hitherto the exclusive property of the Capital Transit Co.—moving the "wrong way" around the western arc of the circle. The route leads from the circle out Massachusetts avenue to the embassy.

Their Majesties will follow the same route when they return to the White House between 6 and 6:30 p. m. The royal automobile will move at approximately 8 miles per hour.

Advance announcement of the White House-Embassy route, it was apparent yesterday, came only after prolonged debate among authorities responsible for the British monarch's safety here. The Secret Service gave a cool reception toward the proposal for what amounts to a second "parade," but influence of the State Department and White House was exerted in favor of giving the public as many opportunities as possible for a personal welcome to the British rulers.

Scramble for Seats

Connecticut avenue businessmen, among the most persistent advocates of announcing the White House-Embassy route, last night had not completed plans for the ocassion, but it is expected that many of the preparations in progress along Pennsylvania avenue for the last two weeks will be duplicated today on Washington's "Fifth Avenue."

On Pennsylvania avenue yesterday shopkeepers, already swamped with orders for seats, were anxiously trying to find space for more spectators at $1 to $5 a head.

The plans of the King and Queen continued to affect in a variety of ways the plans of thousands of persons:

Men and women awaiting trial in Police or Traffic Court Thursday or Friday, unless actually in jail, found their hearings postponed to Saturday or later, so that police witnesses will be available for street service.

Book lovers learned that all branches and sub-branches of the Public Library will be closed from 10 a. m. to 2 p. m. Thursday, though the Central Building will remain open for the usual hours.

D. C. Unit Votes to Kill Lunacy Body

Acts to Report Vreeland Bill to Revise Handling Of Mental Cases

The House District Committee yesterday voted in executive session to report a bill designed to abolish the year-old Commission on Mental Health, while the sub-committee on public health killed for the session two bills proposing certain regulations of the practice of optometry.

Meanwhile, Chairman King called the second Senate District Committee meeting of the session to clear the calendar of accumulated bills passed by the House. The meeting is scheduled for 2 p. m. tomorrow.

Although long before the committee, the Overton bill to stabilize the Federal payment on a ratio of U. S.-owned land to the total area of the District probably will not be acted on, Senator King said, because no report has been made on it by the Budget Bureau.

Would Save $20,000.

The lunacy bill, sponsored by Representative Vreeland (Republican), of New Jersey, would place the examination of insane persons on a basis similar to that of most Eastern metropolitan centers, according to its author, and save the District $20,000 a year in salaries.

Under Freeland's plan, a person suspected of insanity could be committed to St. Elizabeths Hospital for a 30-day examination period, providing the application for admission were accompanied by the certificates of two local physicians and approved by Police Court or the United States District Court.

In the trial period the patient would be examined by the chief psychiatrist of Gallinger Hospital and at least two physicians of the staff of St. Elizabeths. If found sane, he would be discharged from the hospital at once.

Jury Trial Optional

If the patient were found insane the bill provides the District health office would so report to the United States District Court and a jury trial would be granted if demanded by the patient or his representative, but if no trial were demanded the court could then order his commitment to St. Elizabeths for an indefinite period.

The two optometry bills killed by the sub-committee would have restricted practice of optometry in department stores and without certain qualifications.

The House District Committee yesterday heard Sidney Katz, of the District-Maryland C. I. O., against the McGehee bill to amend the local unemployment compensation act.

Katz charged that he and other opponents of the bill had not been notified of hearings and had not had an opportunity to oppose the bill.

Capital News In Brief

The Plot Thickens

A mysterious "shot in the dark" last night contributed a dramatic finale to the play rehearsal of the Montgomery County Women's Democratic Club, at the Takoma-Silver Spring Junior High School, and left nearby residents and police baffled.

The amateur actresses had just finished running through their script when a report rang out and the pungent smell of gunpowder filtered through the building.

Investigating officers were unable to confirm suspicions that boys with firecrackers were responsible for the "shot."

Mrs. Strong Gives $10,000

Founder of the Hattie M. Strong Foundation, which provides educational loans to college students, Mrs. Strong has also been donor of college projects including George Washington University's Hall of Government and women's dormitory, and a Y. W. C. A. dormitory here.

Picker, Spare That Bloom

Washington botanists will have to do their flower and shrub picking somewhere else than the C. & O. Canal from now on if they would stay out of the clutches of the law.

Frank T. Garside, acting superintendent, National Capital Parks, yesterday ordered strict enforcement by park police of the regulations "forbidding removal of plant materials . . . along the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Parkway," after nearby residents were discovered removing plants to their private gardens.

W. H. McReynolds, Treasury Aide, Given Honorary Doctorate of Laws; London Economist Discusses Importance of Culture

Eighty-five students received bachelor of arts degrees at graduation ceremonies of American University in Continental Hall last night. The university marked its twenty-fifth commencement by honoring nine Government employes with other degrees and bestowing on "a model career civil servant" an honorary doctor of laws.

William Henry McReynolds, administrative assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, was selected by a committee of 40 personnel and public administration experts as the career employe who has made an "outstanding contribution to sound governmental administration." He received the doctorate along with Sir Harold Bellman, governor of the London School of Economics, who was commencement orator, and Dr. Dayton Ernest McClain, of Cambridge, Md.

Ph. D. Awarded

Seven students, six of them Federal employes, were given Bachelor of Science degrees in Business Administration. Another 13, of whom three are employed by the Government, received Master of Arts degrees. A Ph. D. was awarded to Sonya Forthal for a thesis on Chicago municipal political machinery.

Sir Harold, speaking on "Culture or Anarchy?" drews a distinction between culture with a "C" and a "K." The latter, he said, in an unmistakable allusion to Germany, "suggests the negation of civilization." For culture with a "C" he quoted the definition of British Mathematician-Philosopher A. N. Whitehead: "Activity of thought, and receptiveness to beauty and humane feeling." Such a culture, he said, has existed for centuries for the few, but is only now broadening to a popular base.

"An effective democracy," he continued, "presupposes a basis of culture which is not particularly conspicuous in most democratic countries today," but which must be brought into existence if progress is to follow.

Curriculum Reorganized

Chancellor Joseph M. M. Gray announced that the university had reorganized the curriculum for the liberal arts college providing a series of basic courses in biological sciences, physical sciences, social sciences and the humanities which must be pursued in the first two years.

Work Congress Hits Legislative Economizers

Representative Geyer Lauds $60-for-Those-Over-60 Pension Plan

Economy advocates of both parties in Congress were scored yesterday by Representative John Coffee (Democrat), of Washington, and Lee Geyer (Democrat), of California, in addresses before the afternoon session of the Right to Work Congress in the Departmental Auditorium.

Praising the old-age insurance plan of the Workers Alliance, sponsors of the congress, which would provide $60 a month to every person over 60 years old, Representative Geyer declared he would embody the plan in an amendment to the social security act, which he proposed to introduce today.

Howard U. Professor Speaks

Delegates were urged by Coffee to support only those Congressmen who supported labor's program.

Charges that opposition to the cultural and educational WPA projects was based mainly on a desire to keep "enlightenment" from "the mass of the people" were made at the evening session by Doxey Wilkerson, vice president of the American Federation of Teachers and professor at Howard University.

Assurance to every man and woman in the United States of the right to work "as their American birthright" was set forth as the objective of the conference in a resolution.

Farm-Labor-Small Busines Union

Protection of the New Deal social legislation against the "enemies of democracy and social progress represented in Congress by the so-called 'economy' advocates," and the union of organized labor, small business men and farmers were other objectives named in the resolution.

Semidetached Houses Opposed

Opposition to erection of semi-detached houses in fully restricted A areas in Manor Park and a request for expansion of Sunday bus service were voted by the Manor Park Citizen's Association last night.

Other resolutions urged the National Capital Parks and Planning Commission to repair backstops on baseball fields and authorized the president to appoint a committee to report on the milk situation.

Plans were laid for a membership drive.

Normal Life Sought for Handicapped

Mrs. Doyle Describes Visits to Institutions For Children

The work of the Board of Education Advisory Council in visiting institutions for handicapped children was described last night by Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the board, at the fourth annual diner of the principals and Parent-Teacher Association presidents of the Sixth Division, public schools.

The council's duties are directed toward finding a way to give handicapped children a more normal life, Mrs. Doyle told 75 women at the dinner in the Continental Hotel. She urged her hearers to study the council's pending report and co-operate in seeking larger appropriations for public education of handicapped children.

Miss Mary Dilger, representing the principals, Mrs. Laura Costenbader, for the P.-T. A. presidents, and Mrs. Florence Rogers, supervising principal of the sixth division, spoke in appreciation of the co-operation between parents and teachers resulting from the work of the associations.

Mrs. Walter C. Jones, chairman of the meeting, praised Mrs. Rogers' work as supervising principal.

The invocation was said by Mrs. J. N. Saunders, past president of the District Congress. Mrs. A. Manning and Mrs. Martin Johnson sang, accompanied by Mrs. A. Barbour, and flowers were brought from the Kenilworth School gardens by Miss E. Emmons, principal of that school.

Free School Lunch Drive Launched

A move to sponsor free lunches next school session for needy children in Takoma Park, Md., was taken under consideration last night by the town's Community League at its final business-dinner meeting of the summer, held at the Takoma Park Elementary School.

Walter McClenon, who took office as the new president of the organization, suggested that the town establish ceremonial recognition of citizenship for persons becoming 21. Dr. C. C. Galloway was appointed to participate in the Citizens' Committee for Establishment of a Community Center. Dr. Guy Clinton, retiring president, also spoke.

Stone, King To Speak at Stokes Dinner

Testimonial Affair To Honor Retiring Canon of Cathedral

A testimonial dinner to Canon and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes will be held at 6:30 o'clock tomorrow night in Barker Hall at the Y. W. C. A., with Associate Justice Stone of the Supreme Court and Senator King, of Utah, as principal speakers.

The dinner was arranged by the Committee on Religious Life in the Nation's Capital, under the chairmanship of the Rev. Albert Joseph McCartney, D. D., LL. D. The committee, in announcing the dinner, released the following resolution:

"In view of the removal of Canon and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes from Washington, many of their friends and well-wishers throughout the city have coveted the opportunity of saying to him in an informal way how much they have appreciated the services he has rendered the many religious and welfare agencies of the Capital City througout the years of his residence here.

Bishop Will Speak

"His fellow coadjutors in ecclesiastical circles especially realize the value of the Canon's counsel, which they have felt free to draw upon under all occasions and in giving of his counsel and of his time he has been most liberal."

In addition to Justice Stone and Senator King, other speakers will include Bishop James E. Freeman, Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University; John Ihlder, housing director; Coleman Jennings, president of the Community Chest; the Rev. William S. Abernethy, of Calvary Baptist Church; Dr. Leverett Lyon, vice president, Brookings Institution, and Miss Dorothy Davidson, of the District Girl Scouts.

Members of the Rev. McCartney's committee are Henry C. Barden, the Rev. R. W. Brooks, the Rev. W. H. Burgen, the Rev. William L. Darby, Waldron Faulkner, Helen D. Hoffman, the Rev. Edgar A. Love, Dr. Benjamin M. Mays, Mrs. W. A. Roberts, the Rev. J. W. Rustin, William H. Savin, the Rev. Maurice Sheehy and the Rev. Lawrence Shehan.

Bandit Victims Name Suspects In Line-up

Seven Men Identified As Gang Responsible For Holdup Series

Seven men, picked up after a bandit had been shot by police in a wild auto chase through Northeaast Washington, were identified by victims last night as members of a gang which carried out at least five holdups in Washington.

Six victims who had been slugged and beaten by robbers identified suspects in a police lineup.

Two of the suspects were arrested yesterday in Baltimore when they tried to pawn a stolen watch. Two are in Casualty Hospital, one wounded in the police pursuit, the other beaten up by his accomplices.

Police said six of the gang had been arrested before and that two were confirmed marihuana addicts. The bandits had confessed, police said, to all five holdups and blamed their cruelty toward their victims on the fact they had been drinking.

The identifications were made by Thomas H. Cribb, of 1314 Saratoga avenue northeast, a cab driver, robbed of $5, his cab, and a watch, May 15; William Wishard, attendant in a gas station at Central avenue and Benning road northeast, robbed of $27 and slugged with a bottle May 31; Melvin Charles, of 214 Emerson street northwest, a cab driver, robbed of $1 and his cab May 31; Walter T. Trittipoe, of 2108 First street northwest, robbed of his cab and beaten last Thursday; Samuel Ackerman, manager of a liquor store at 1812 Hamline street northwest, and his father-in-law, Joseph Metesky, 56, slugged and robbed, also Thursday night.

Lieut. John Fowler and the robbery squad are continuing an investigation into the gang's activities in the belief that it was responsible for other crimes in the District area.

Morris Glavier, 31, of 5400 Fifth street northwest, assistant manager of the Thom McAn shoe store at 418 Seventh street northwest, hardly had opened the store yesterday morning when his first customer appeared, bought two pairs of socks, drew a gun, and left with the socks and $200.

Pushed down the cellar steps by the colored intruder, Glavier required treatment at Casualty Hospital for back injuries.

$16 Basic Wage Set for Women in D. C. Factories

More than 2,000 women and minors employed in manufacturing and wholesale concerns in Washington yesterday were granted a $16 minimum weekly wage in the sixth and final order established by the District Minimum Wage Board.

Plug Asked For Numbers Loophole

Pine Moves for Court Retraction Of Remark Held Aid to Racket

Encouragement given the numbers racket by a casual expression of the Court of Appeals last week was countered yesterday by a Government suggestion that the court retract the remark.

The appellate justices brushed aside a mass of technical objections to the conviction of Griffin Smith, 28, colored, who was arrested by officers who found him writing numbers slips in a barber's chair.

Legal Effect Doubted

In discussing the evidence, the court commented that, although the language of the numbers law "is broad and speaks of any ticket 'used for the purpose of conducting any lottery,' we are not disposed to hold that a dead or expired lottery ticket would satisfy the statute."

Since the question was not disputed in the Smith appeal, the remark was considered a mere opinion, without necessary legal effect.

However, persons in the racket were delighted and lawyers and police officers suggested that judges trying numbers racketeers might feel bound to give it some attention.

Pine Would Appeal

District Attorney Pine and Assistant District Attorney Tarver filed in the Court of Appeals yesterday a motion to modify the court's ruling by taking out the remark.

The Government motion said that since the high court held the opinion that dead tickets were not good evidence trial judges doubtless would feel the same way and the Government would have no chance to take the question to the Supreme Court for settlement because Smith's conviction was upheld.

Philadelphia Firm Wins $10,843,530 Building Contract

McCloskey and Co., of Philadelphia, yesterday was awarded a contract by the Procurement Division, Treasury Department, for the construction of two new buildings to house the Social Security Board and the Railroad Retirement Board.

The amount, under the contract, was $10,843,530.

The Government allowed the contractor 420 calendar days to complete the two big structures on a site bounded by Independence avenue, C, Third and Fourth streets, southwest. The Philadelphia concern was lowest of five bidders.

Takoma Citizens Oppose Rezoning

The Takoma Park (D. C.) Citizens Association last night voted to oppose the change in zoning of lots along Laurel street near Eastern avenue from residential to commercial and opposed granting of a special permit for erection of an educational institution at 801 Fern place.

Workers Alliance Not Over 3% Communist, But Are Good Organizers, Official Declares

Housewife Asserts U. S. Should Take Care of Jobless

Communists do not comprise more than 3 per cent of the Workers Alliance, according to Joseph Hoffman, an officer of the alliance's St. Louis local "But, let me tell you," he added, "it's these Communists that know what things are all about, and how to get an organization running."

HOFFMAN

Hoffman, here to attend the alliance-sponsored National Right to Work Congress, will present a picture of relief conditions in St. Louis. As he describes it, the picture isn't pretty.

Can't Even Staff Office

"People on State relief get $2 per person per month. Some 7,500 families in St. Louis get this sort of relief. Another 8,000 are trying to get on the rolls. They can't, because there are not enough funds even to staff an office to take care of their applications."

Harry F. Baldwin, a former newspaper man now an alliance official of Madison, Wis., was equally certain that the organization was not Communist-staffed. "Take me as a case in point," he said. "I'm a Wisconsin Progressive Party State Committeeman."

BALDWIN

"The State is in a tough spot," shouting to make himself heard above the strains of "We Shall Not Be Moved," sung by fellow dele-gate-diners. "A liberal administration has just been defeated."

U. S. Take the Rest

Mrs. Mary Quist, of Akron, Ohio, is the wife of a WPA worker. Up to this time merely a housewife, Mrs. Quist wants work and wants it bad. She's looked around for several years but can't find anything to do. She'd like to get on a sewing project but would really prefer a job in private industry.

MRS. QUIST

"My opinion is this," the German-born naturalized woman said. "Every person in the United States ought to have a job. But if there aren't any in private industry, the Government ought to take care of us."

Bitter About Investigation

The WPA Writers Project, spearhead of the attack on white collar relief schemes, is not only necessary in times of depression, but should be a continuing Government function to take care of novelists who can have published only one book every couple of years, according to S. Emmett Gowen, newspaperman and novelist.

GOWEN

Gowen is bitter about the Congressional investigations of the projects. "I can say, as someone who has been on it, that the investigations have been done in an unfair and un-American way."

Blames Private Industry

With 26 acres of "fairland" in Stow, Ohio, A. W. Smayer, WPA laborer, can't farm it because he has no equipment. "When the depression came along," he explains, "we all thought with Hoover that prosperity was just around the corner and hocked everything we had in the hope we could pull out. First thing we knew, farm loans were foreclosed and our tools went the way of everything else."

SMAYER

Since then Smayer has worked in the rubber plants in Akron and done whatever jobs came his way. Now he is convinced that "the people who own private industry have gotten back on their feet but won't open their factories up."

Veteran Faces Eviction

Carlos Tirada, Puerto Rican-born and a World War veteran, has been used to clerical work all his life, sometimes at Government jobs. He found white collar work with the WPA, only to be dropped in the recent layoffs. A broken leg bars him from pick and shovel work and he wants to know where to turn. He said his fears were doubly acute, since he faces eviction, and knows that procedure from first-hand experience last year, when he, his wife and eight children found themselves on the sidewalks of New York for three days.

Long Memory Of Law Snares Lorton Fugitive

Two Washington policemen's memories for faces yesterday resulted in the capture of an escaped Lorton prisoner who had fled the reformatory 10 months ago. A second Lorton fugitive was arrested in Nashville, Tenn.

Theodore W. Merritt, 32, serving 360 days at Lorton for threats, escaped last August.

When Policemen L. L. Frost and H. S. Montgomery, cruising in a Third Precinct scout car, ran into the missing prisoner in 2500 block Pennsylvania avenue northwest yesterday, they immediately recognized and arrested him.

Charles W. Marshal, 19, who escaped from Lorton last December, was picked up in Nashville Sunday in connection with a holdup, identified through fingerprints, and returned here yesterday.

Bilbo Files Bill Asking $77,105.51 For Failed Bank

Senator Bilbo (Democrat), of Mississippi, yesterday introduced a bill to require the Secretary of the Treasury to return $77,105.51, with interest from November 1, 1938, to the receiver of the Commercial National Bank, as an alleged overpayment to the alien property custodian.

The measure, referred to the Claims Committee, provides that 20 per cent of the claim shall be paid to Thomas E. Rhodes, an attorney, and the remainder be prorated among depositors.

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning shows there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Archibald Awarded Split Decision Over Silva

2,500 Here See Challenger Make Comeback After Knockdown in Fifth

By Al Hailey.

The champion danced out of his corner in the fifth, shot a series of quick lefts and rights to Silva's head and then downed the Mexican with a hard, overhand right to Silva's left eye.

Joe went down for the first time in his fight career, took a count of nine and arose with a glassy look in his eyes. He recovered quickly, however, and came back with a flurry of whirlwind punches which drove Archibald against the ropes.

Outboxed All Way

Outboxed in every round, Silva was too busy warding off Archibald's lightning lunges to get his whirlwind system functioning. Joe took everything the champion had in the way of a punch after the fifth round knockdown but plowed back in for more, carrying the fight to Archibald.

Frank Schuyler, a judge, called the fight a draw. J. A. Sullivan, the other judge, gave Silva the first round and called the fourth and tenth even. Referee Charley Reynolds gave Silva the fourth and tenth, calling the first and ninth even. On The Post sheet, Silva took the first, and the fourth and seventh were even.

Flyer Is Guest

Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, Mexican Ambassador, headed a party from the embassy in a special box to cheer Silva on.

The ring overflowed with prominent fight characters in the few minutes lull that followed the entry of first Silva and then Archibald.

Mickey Walker, former world's middleweight champion, was introduced by Announcer Jimmy Lake. Then Lake boomed out an introduction of a Mexican flyweight fighter, Francisco Sarabia, announcing in stentorian tones that Francisco had just broken the world's flying record from Mexico City to New York by winging over the distance in 10 hours and 40 minutes. Francisco flew here to be the guest of the embassy party.

The gate, disappointing to Promoter Joe Turner, was $2,996.51, with 2,313 paying guests and 200 "on the house."

Dell Easy Winner

After hitting Sammy Chivas, 142, Detroit, with everything but Announcer Jimmy Lake's chromium-plated microphone, Carl Dell, Archibald's stablemate, took a unanimous decision over the Greek boy in six bloody rounds.

Chivas was bleeding from a deep gash over the left eye after a few seconds of the first round. Dell hit him freely with everything he had, but Chivas came back to trade punches with him until the final bell rang.

Working for a knockout, Frankie Wills, 144½, local boy, slugged, pushed and shoved his way through another six rounder to take a unanimous decision over a game Red Osborn, also a Washington boy.

Wills had Osborn on the verge of a knockout in the fifth and early in the sixth, but Red came back to discourage Wills' attempts with a body attack, which left Wills a tired citizen at the end of the fight.

The night's action started when Al Hart, 210½-pound Army War College colored physical director, knocked out Panama Joe Walker, 185, Baltimore, in 1 minute and 40 seconds of the first round.

Short Left Does It

Hart, in his first professional fight, shot a short left to Walker's jaw, and Walker fell forward on his face. He did not stir as Referee Ray Bowen counted him out.

In another four-rounder, Jackie Carter, 135½, Silva's stablemate, floored Lee Rosen, 131, Baltimore, five times before Bowen finally stopped the fight in the fourth and awarded Carter a technical knockout, after 1 minute of fighting.

Carter floored Rosen with rights to the stomach, twice in the second and twice in the third. Bowen missed a low blow by Carter in the third to Rosen's vulnerable midsection.

Gedeon Due To Replace Sammy West

College Star May Start at Cleveland; Club Abandons Hope For First Baseman

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

St. Louis, June 5.—And so the Washington Senators attempted to trade Cecil Travis to the Detroit Tigers in exchange for Rudy York, and the Tigers said:

"Not interested."

That terse reply, dooming the chief hope of the Nats to acquire a first baseman, was made not many hours ago, The Post has learned.

Back in Washington, Clark Griffith, frantically attempting to bolster his tail-spinning Washington club, had renewed his efforts to obtain the hard-swinging York from Detroit. He upped his offer, giving the Detroit club the choice of a Washington pitcher in addition to Travis, but to no avail.

Deal Is "Cold"

An official traveling with the Washington club today declared that the Travis-York deal is as cold as an icicle. "The Tigers told us 'Nothing doing.' They said they won't part with York."

Sammy West, a converted outfielder, has been doing a tolerable first-basing job with the Nats, but to put it bluntly he is no first-baseman. And one of his chief crimes is that he is a left-handed hitter on a club already top-heavy with port-side swingers.

With the Tigers slamming the door on the Nats in their search for York, Manager Bucky Harris has abandoned hope that his club will obtain a big-league first baseman. No club in the league owns an extra first sacker with the exception of the Tigers, who are clinging to Greenberg and York despite the fact that only one man can occupy the bag.

Griffith had pressed his trade talk with the Tigers in the hope that the Detroit club's lowly position in the race, due to the lack of a capable shortstop and pitching talent, would put the Tigers in a trading mood. But apparently it hasn't.

Gedeon May Start

When the Nats move into Cleveland later in the week, Harris may be desperate enough to put young Elmer Gedeon into a big league uniform immediately and let him play first base. Gedeon, star first baseman of the University of Michigan varsity—a 6 foot 4 inch mastodon who hits right-handed—will join the Nats on Thursday.

Immediate help for the Nats is forthcoming from only one direction. Manager Bucky Harris has asked Clark Griffith to draft Second Baseman Jimmy Bloodworth from the Nats' Springfield club. Bloodworth is a slugging sensation in the Eastern League and Harris plans to alternate him with Buddy Myer when the Nats face left-handed pitching.

Meanwhile it is a helpless Washington club that is burrowing its way toward the league cellar—loser of 11 of its last 13 games, and seemingly incapable of winning the close ones.

The Nats are in seventh place for a very simple reason: They have been playing seventh-place baseball, or worse. Their pitchers have been unable to hold leads, and their infielders have been booting balls at critical moments. And with men on bases, the club is a punchless outfit.

Only Two Dependables

Dutch Leonard and Alex Alexandra are the only pitchers on the staff in whom Harris retains even a modicum of confidence. He is at the point of making a relief pitcher, exclusively, out of Joe Krakauskas. Ken Chase and Jimmy DeShong are horrible risks whenever they go to the mound, and if Chase isn't the worst fielding pitcher in the league, he is a close second.

Bringing pain to Harris also, is little Bobby Estalella, the long-hitting

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

St. Louis, Mo., June 5.—In the interests of his man, Bob Pastor, sharp-tongued Jimmy Johnston is traipsing about the country putting the rap on Joe Louis and demanding, if a bit ungrammatically, "who did he ever lick?" The strategy of Johnston's campaign is obvious enough. He hopes to badger Louis into another bout with Pastor.

POVICH

They fought once, you remember. And if you were there, you would probably prefer to forget. What you saw was a farcial affair in which Pastor somehow eluded Louis for the ten-round distance, making no attempt to fight, but setting a new record for backward sprinting with gloves on. Pastor stayed the distance, but was promptly erased from the heavyweight picture.

However, Jimmy Johnston's visions of a return Pastor-Lewis match are not nearly as screwy as they might have seemed. And there is evidence that it might happen. A year ago, the suggestion of a Louis-Tony Galento fight was laughed down as a colossal joke. It couldn't happen. But it did, and Jimmie Johnston, who is no stranger to prize-fight intrigue, can take heart from the current situation in heavyweight ranks.

Pastor Unique Anyhow

With time having dulled the memory of the last Pastor-Louis affair, Johnston may not be besting his breasts and demanding a re-match in vain. He has, at least, in Pastor, a fellow who was not knocked out by Joe Louis. Such as Max Baer, Max Schmeling, Jimmy Braddock and Primo Carnero couldn't take it from Louis, but Pastor did.

And it's admitted by the ringsiders at the recent Nova-Baer fight that Lou Nova is not yet ready for Louis. He took too many of Baer's looping right-hand punches on vulnerable spots to suggest that he could last even two rounds with Louis. Against a chap as wide-open as Nova, the Brown Bomber would have a carnival night with his left hooks.

Louis has a fight with Galento later in the month, and after he beats Galento the heavyweight picture will be at its dreariest in history. There isn't a figure on the fistic horizon who would be acceptable as an opponent for Louis. Nova might get the shot, but even Nova's handlers are on the point of refusing a crack at the title until next year, by which time the Coast Boy may conceivably brush up on his defense.

Just a Galento Imitation

In belittling Louis, Pastor's manager is using a theory that Joe Jacobs found practical in the case of Galento. Galento's "I'll moider that bum," repeated on every possible occasion, and backed up by a few pushovers of stumblebums, finally netted him what will probably be the loser's share of a bout with Louis.

As is pointed out by St. Louis' John Wray, it's an old trick to fling the "who did he ever beat?" at both reigning champions and champs who have hung up their gloves. It's a tough one to answer, and may have some merit even in the case of Joe Louis, despite the fact that Louis by this time is recognized as one of the better heavyweight champions of history.

"Who did he ever beat?" Who, but a lot of second-fighters on his way up the fistic ladder, and who besides circus-freak Carnera, aged old Jimmy Braddock, a frightened Max Baer, punchless Tommy Farr, and Max Schmeling, who had been a joke champion. Oh, yes, and Jack Sharkey who was trying a comeback to what? Certainly, Louis didn't lick a first-rate opponent, although he beat the best of his time.

They could say it, too, of such as Gene Tunney and Jack Dempsey. They could call Tunney's two wins over Dempsey a pair of triumphs over a tired old man who had no business in the ring after his long period of idleness and advancing age. In that light, Tunney didn't beat much.

Who Did Dempsey Beat?

And Dempsey won his fight from Jess Willard, an over-sized cowboy who by his own admission never liked to fight. Dempsey, during his seven-year reign didn't beat a great fighter. The fellows he did beat were Luis Firpo, an ox of a man who never learned to fight; Georges Carpentier, an over-stuffed middleweight; Bill Brennan, a back number, and Tommy Gibbons, a glorified light-heavy who went the route with him.

They probably asked the same question of Jim Corbett after he licked Sullivan at New Orleans. Who did he lick? Nobody but a paunchy, hard-drinking big fellow who used to be considerable of a fighter. And when Jack Johnson knocked out Jim Jeffries, he licked only a hollow shell, ravaged by retirement and an easy life during years of absence from the ring.

Sure, they can say it of every champion, but they do not say it before the fight. They can only belittle the loser after the champion has made a mess of him. Up to that point, the other guy in the ring was supposed to be a pretty good fighter himself, huh?

Archibald, Scalzo Fight Here Unlikely

A proposal of local boxing officials to stage a world's title fight here in September between Champion Joey Archibald and Petey Scalzo, No. 1 contender, was jolted out of shape yesterday when Al Weill, Archibald's manager, dealt out a demand for a $15,000 flat guarantee.

The match between Archibald and Scalzo, as planned by members of the District Boxing Commission, would highlight the week of the twentieth annual convention of the National Boxing Association in Washington in September.

In a conference with Weill after Archibald weighed in at the boxing commission offices for his fight with Mexican Joe Silva last night, members of the commission, Promoter Joe Turner and Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn informed Weill of their plans and then launched into speculations about how the tickets for

New York, June 5.—American League pitchers who could beat the New York Yankees this season have been put in a class by themselves but today a new niche was created for Tommy Bridges, slender 155-pound righthander of the Detroit Tigers, who handed the McCarthymen their first shutout of the year, 3-0.

Bridges, who has the best curve in baseball, an explosive hook and one of the fastest balls in the league, mixed all three in bewildering fashion to set down the Yankee sluggers with only four hits. He had smooth sailing all the way except for the ninth when a single by Tommy Henrich, a walk, one of four he gave up, and George Selkirk's single, filled the bases. But Bridges, pitching slowly and confidently, fanned Joe Gordon for strikeout No. 10 and forced Babe Dahlgren to pop up to Charley Gehringer and end the game.

U.S. Net Teams Will Challenge English Squad

By the Associated Press.

London, June 5.—The United States will challenge for the all-England tennis titles at Wimbledon with a team of ten players, headed by Bobby Riggs, the country's top-ranking amateur from Chicago, and Alice Marble, San Francisco's national champion.

Entries fro the June 26-July 8 championships closed today with between 350 and 400 players from virtually every nation seeking the singles titles won last year by America's Don Budge and Mrs. Helen Wills Moody. Budge has turned pro, and Mrs. Moody, in New York, said she did not feel her game was in good enough shape to warrant playing at Wimbledon.

Riggs, playing on foreign soil for the first time, and England's H. W. (Bunny) Austin are favorites. Austin, never a winner but runner-up to Budge last year and Ellsworth Vines in 1932, is in the United States on a Moral Rearmament tour but plans to return home in time to practice.

Also entered from the United States are Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., who never has played at Wimbledon; Don McNeill, Oklahoma City; Charles Harris, Palm Beach; Owen Anderson, Los Angeles; Bill Robertson, wealthy Californian; Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, Brookline, Mass.; Helen Jacobs, Oakland, Calif., and Gracyn Wheeler, Santa Monica, Calif.

Mrs. Moody Decides Not to Defend Title

New York, June 5 (AP).—Mrs. Helen Wills Moody said today she had decided not to defend the women's tennis championship at Wimbledon this year because she felt she was not at the top of her game.

"I was in New York most of the winter and consequently missed outdoor play," she said. "I played indoors but that is different, and although my game has picked up since I have been able to practice on outdoor courts, I do not feel it is up to standard. Besides, I have been so busy on a book, a mystery story I have not had so much time for tennis."

Burnett's Two 72's Lead Federal Tourney

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Volney G. Burnett, the District of Columbia government's fire chaser, posted a pair of neat 72's yesterday at Indian Spring in the annual Federal Golf Association two-day, 36-hole affair, to apparently clinch low gross honors for the second time he has played in the event.

Two years ago Volney fired a record twin-round total of 69-70, 139 over the same course to easily top a similar field, and although defending champion Jerry Hart, last year's runner-up Jock Olmsted, former champ Tom Belshe and publinks ace Jimmy Gipe are in today's field, Burnett's score looks good for the J. Edgar Hoover low gross trophy again.

The former Maryland State champ, from the host club, was out in 37 on his morning trip, but dropped a birdie putt on 15 and surrounded it by 8 pars on the back nine for a sub-par 35 and 72. Playing the back nine first in the afternoon, he had a double-bogey six on the eleventh and ended up three over with a 39, but came back in 33, two under, with 7 pars and 40 and 20 foot-birdie putts. His putter was hot most of the day, aiding in some unorthodox pars, dropping several over the 20-foot length.

Ortiz, Late of Nats, Batting, Pitching Hero in 20-1 Game

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlotte, N. C., June 5.—Roberto Ortiz, elongated Cuban who is property of the Washington Nationals, allowed only six hits and banged out four himself tonight as Charlotte swamped Richmond, 20-1, in a series opener.

The 6-foot 4-inch former sugar cane field worker fanned five and walked as many in chalking up his most impressive victory for the visitors.

With a double and three singles, Ortiz not only was Charlotte's batting leader but drove in two runs and scored the same number himself.

Riley Smith Given Bachelor Dinner By 'Skins' Owner

Honoring a former football general who, it was said, would shortly begin taking orders instead of commanding, sports and civic leaders gathered last night at the home of George Marshall, owner of the Washington Redskins, to wish luck to Riley Smith, who departs the bachelor ranks tonight.

Smith, one-time University of Alabama All-American quarterback and one of the greatest backs the Redskins have ever boasted, will be joined with Frances Boykin at 7 o'clock tonight at Christ Church, Alexandria.

Heading the list of admirers who attended the bachelor dinner for Smith last night was the father of the bride, Representative Francis W. Boykin (Democrat), of Alabama; Walter K. Hutchinson, International News Service political writer, and Don Irwin and Charley Malone, football teammates of Smith.

Favored Murphy and Rice Bow in D. C. Tennis Tourney

Stocklinski, Smith Win At Edgemoor

Ritzenberg-Askin Combination Victors In Doubles Over Brinkerhoff-St. Jean

By Jack Munhall.

One of two highly regarded newcomers to local tennis was eliminated but the other scored an impressive victory in third-round matches of the annual City of Washington Men's Tournament at Edgemoor Club.

Dick Murphy, at one time the Nation's twelfth ranking player, was upset in straight sets, 6—3, 6—0, by fifth-seeded Ray Stocklinski, former public parks champion, while Alphonso Smith, transplanted Richmond ace and high-ranking Middle Atlantic contender, turned back the troublesome Austin Rice, 6—1, 1—6, 6—4.

The decisiveness with which the tireless little Stocklinski defeated Murphy was startling, for some observers had expected the dapper former Massachusetts State champion to go at least to the quarter-finals, which Ray and Smith gained by their victories.

Stocklinski's obvious superiority over Murphy was clearly mirrored in the second set when he allowed his favored opponent only five points.

On the other hand Smith, a bespectacled little man who relies more on accuracy than power, showed fine form in ridding his path of Rice, who furnished the tournament's first major upset by beating fourth-seeded Allies Ritzenberg, University of Maryland star, in the first round.

Willis-Turner Bow

Ritzenberg returned yesterday to play one of the feature matches of the doubles. He and Nathan Askin, with whom he won the 1939 Southern Conference championship, opened fire on the crown now held by Dooly Mitchell and Ralph McElvenny with a 6—2, 6—4 victory over Harry Brinkerhoff, sensational young junior player, and Lawrence St. Jean.

In what was a slight upset and the only surprise in the doubles competition Tom Moorhead and Charlie Sturtevant, the same fellow who gave Davie Johnsen such a battle in the singles before losing in three sets, defeated veteran Ricky Willis and Billy Turner, sixth ranking junior player, 6—4, 6—2.

Three of today's schedule of five singles matches in the round of 16 are expected to provide early fireworks, and perhaps another upset or two. First in chronological order, and maybe in interest, is the encounter between eighth-seeded Frank Shore, a real "dark horse" in view of his current hot pace, and Billy Turner, at 4 o'clock. Turner is unseeded but improving daily with a rapidity that presages plenty of trouble for future foes.

Action for Farrin

Also at 4 o'clock Lieut. Jimmy Farrin, seeded second, tackles Tom Moorhead whose last effort was a mild upset over Ed Mather Sunday. Then at 4:30 Ralph (Buddy) Adair, one of the most promising young players in the District, engages third-seeded Ricky Wallis.

This is Adair's big chance, for if he gets by the veteran and cagey Willis there is a quarter-final match with his old rival, Davie Johnsen, in the offing. Should the Adair-Johnsen match materialize it should be a humdinger, bringing together as it does two Edgemoor members who are battling for higher ranking in the club ranks.

Today's program is completed by matches between Johnsen and John Curran and defending champion Hugh Lynch and Max Bost, a former Oklahoma State champion and a comparative new comer to local circles.

MEN'S SINGLES

MEN'S DOUBLES

FIRST ROUND—Adair and Breese defeated Dorsett and Wadden, default; Sherburne and Wilson defeated Armstrong and Partner, default.

SECOND ROUND—Askin and Ritzenberg defeated Brinkerhoff and St. Jean, 6—2, 6—4; Moorhead and Sturtevant defeated Willis and Turner, 6—4, 6—2; Shore and Smith defeated R. L. Willis and Herreshoff, 6—0, 6—1.

SECOND ROUND—Breese and Adair defeated Cowan and Pratt, 8—6, 6—2; Johnsen and Lynch defeated Sherburne and J. Wilson, 6—1, 6—0.

TODAY'S SCHEDULE

MEN'S SINGLES—Third round.

MEN'S DOUBLES—Second round.

Right and Wrong in a Canoe: Article V

The Correct Stroke in Paddling a Canoe

J. W. Burch, past commodore of the American Canoe Association, veteran Potomac Boat Club canoeist, shows how not to paddle a canoe. His grip on the paddle is all wrong, and the stroke will get him hardly anywhere

Post Staff Photos.

Here is the correct stroke in a canoe. The left arm bent at the elbow and the right arm extended forward, Burch shows the beginning of a powerful, smooth stroke that he will bring up alongside his body, with the paddle getting a deep reach in the water

Let Back Muscles Do the Work, Says Boating Expert

By Al Hailey

The correct stroke in paddling a canoe is one that will make the muscles of the back and shoulders a bit stiff if you are new at the game and follow the advice of J. W. Burch, canoeing expert of the Potomac Boat Club.

This soreness is all very proper, however, for it is the big muscles of the back and shoulder—not the arms—that should bear the burden of paddling.

To many uninitiated canoeists, the stroke appears a simple matter of swishing the blade through the water and hoping for the best. It's the faulty stroke, however, that canoeing authorities will tell you gets most paddlers in hot water—or at least into the water.

"Drop the blade into the water clean, and when immersed twist at the shoulder, getting a good solid catch."

Burch emphasized that the big muscles of the back and shoulders should be used.

"Put as little strain on the arm muscles as possible," he said. "When the paddle is alongside the body, take it out clean by throwing the left hand off to the left side and right hand to right.

"Recovery of the blade for the next stroke is made by carrying the blade forward a little above the surface, with the forward edge of the blade a little higher than the rear edge."

The common fault in recovery of the blade is for the canoeist to bring it back flat, thus making the next stroke an awkward process.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, June 5.—A new intersectional low for lack of ambition has just been unearthed in old Cooperstown, N. Y., where baseball's starchiest stuffed shirts and its best players will gather next Monday to cry in their beer over the invention of the game, 100 years ago.

The record-breaker is America Russo, 16-year-old Cooperstown problem child, who, despite the lavish care of doting parents, has dedicated his life to imitating Al Schacht. Several psychiatrists will accompany the expedition to the little up-State Bethlehem of baseball, to study Russo, the most interesting case of arrested development found in years. His appalling un-ambition replaces the record set some years ago when a fan waited three hours outside of a hotel for the autograph of One-Eye Connolly.

CONSIDINE

When informed of the existence of his imitator, Schacht slammed down his well-worn volume of Joe Miller and fumed that he would ask police to charge Russo with petty larceny. "There's nothing lower than a guy who'd steal the stuff I stole from Nick Altrock, who stole it from Germany Schaefer, who stole it from Arlie Latham, who stole it from a dyspeptic undertaker," Schacht said.

Russo has promised faithfully—in view of the centennial celebration—not to use any Schacht gag under 100 years old, which won't be hard to do. Schacht may be coaxed into authorizing the release of several hoary old buffooneries which he recently presented to the Cooperstown museum. They are being kept under glass, by a joint committee headed by the president of the historical society and the commissioners of sanitation.

Being Funny May Come Hard

Russo will be one of the featured attractions at a reunion which is expected to be the biggest thing that has hit Cooperstown since James Fenimore Cooper dropped the original manuscript of the Last of the Mohicans on the floor of the town tavern. He will have a terrific job being funny—the same awesome problem that caused the downfall of Schacht at Washington and Boston, where, at his funniest, he was never as funny as some of the players Clark Griffith won in those turkey raffles and Tom Yawkey bought in a fog.

For instance Russo will have to out-funny the representatives sent to Cooperstown by the Phillies, the A's and the Browns. Each big league club is sending a couple of players, so somebody will clap when Judge Landis finishes his mane-tossing speech, in which, we are privileged at this time exclusively to reveal, he will call baseball "the American game."

The two oldest men in baseball, Connie Mack and Gabby Hartnett, will choose up sides. And Russo's going to be pretty anti-climactic if he comes out in a replica of Schacht's green satin frock coat just after Connie Mack (who will lose the choose-up-sides by the margin of one boney knuckle) tries to kick the bat out of Hartnett's flimsy grasp for the right to choose the first player.

To Revive One Ol' Cat

The high school boys of Cooperstown and some soldiers from Fort Jay are going to put on a demonstration of town-ball and one ol' cat, the mother and stepfather of Doubleday's Folly. Some trouble has been experienced getting copies of the rules of these games from Frank Menke, Cooperstown's favorite son. However, the boys, who will appear in beards and stove-pipe pants and blazers, will be relieved to hear that the Phillies are sending Sylvester Johnson as one of their representatives. Syl played a lot of town-ball and one ol' cat around the turn of the nineteenth century, and is now regularly employed by a firm that engages in a kind of half-bred baseball. Syl will be shipped to Cooperstown in the large bottle of alcohol in which he is being preserved. Jack Doyle has offered to lay 10-to-1 that the operators of the baseball museum don't let Syl get out of town.

We hope the plagiaristic Signor Russo, whose theme song is "Little Sir Echo," gets his laughs as only the great master ham can. But even the stunt where he pitches a pantomine home run with the bases filled, and gets kicked out of the box by an invisible manager, will draw as big a laugh as Hartnett will if he wins the choose-up-side and doesn't pick Joe DiMaggio and Bobby Feller, of the rival fraternity, as his first two choices.

Toast of the Sandlots

ANTHONY "BULLET" OSKIN.

At the age of 25 he's already been in three National Softball Championships in Chicago, and confidently hopes to pitch the Arlington Democrats into the trip this year. Hails from Pittsburgh, and talks with a Latinish burr, though he calls himself a "Pole." With the East Liberty Shamrocks, C. F. Papale ten and Aeillo in the Smoky City he was the most dependable tosser, his good right wing taking the respective clubs to Chicago in 1934-35-36.

Recently, in a double-header exhibition at Ballston, he hurled a one-hit shutout for the Democrats over Interior. According to Vic Barrate, president of the Metro Night League, he's the "most likely candidate in the city for the softball laurels Abe Rosenfeld has held all these years." The latter, incidentally, helped Tru Blu to an enormous edge over Tuffy Leemans' club in the other half of the same double bill.

Oskin played with Old Milwaukee last season, but shifted to the Democrats in hopes of getting to the national tournament again. "All we've gotta do," he says, "is whip Tru Blu in our league and we're practically in."—BURNETT.

Reds Defeat Giants, 8 to 2; Walters Wins

New York, June 5 (AP).—Bucky Walters won his seventh victory of the season today as he paced the league-leading Cincinnati Reds to a clean-cut 8-2 victory over the Giants. He allowed only seven hits.

The victory was the second straight over the Giants in the current series and was generally displeasing to a crowd of 7,297 who hooted derisively as the Giants bowed.

It was a five-run rally in the sixth inning that broke up the game and blasted Hal Schumacher from the mound. A triple by Linus Frey with the bases full was the heaviest blow struck in the inning.

Tamulis Holds Pirates As Dodgers Win, 6 to 2

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, June 5.—Vito Tamulis limited the Pittsburgh Pirates to seven hits and that was good enough for the Dodgers, who went on to win, 6-2, today for their second straight over the Bucs.

The Pirates touched him freely only in one inning—the sixth—but he weathered that with the loss of only one run and thereafter settled down to register his third victory of the season.

The Dodgers took picks on Truett Sewell and drove him from the box in the fourth after scoring five of their runs. Mace Brown finished.

Homers Win For Bees, 10-4, Over Cards

By the Associated Press.

Boston, June 5.—The home-run slugging of Max West, who connected for two circuit drives, and Rookie Eddie Miller today enabled the Boston Bees to gain a 10-4 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Miller's homer, whacked in the second inning, was the first of the 11 hits the Bees made off four Cardinal pitchers. West carried the leftfield stand in the fifth inning and found almost the same spot against Paul Dean with two mates aboard in the eighth.

Sailor Bill Posedel started for the Bees and lasted until the seventh, when the Cards staged a two-ran rally to pull up to 6-4. Johnny Lanning followed Joe Sullivan to the mound and put down the uprising by forcing Pinch-hitter Herman Franks to ground out.

Cleveland Wins Over Boston, 7-5, on Homer

Averill Brings in Two With First Circuit Hit Of Year to Sink Sox

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 5.—Earl Averill's first home run of the year, driving in Jimmy Webb and Frankie Pytlak, sank the Boston Red Sox today, 7-5.

The Cleveland outfielder also bagged two doubles. His home run was off Southpaw Fritz Ostermueller, who started the game and was the losing pitcher for Boston although three teammates—Weaver, Wilson and Dickman—saw duty on the mound.

Johnny Allen, traveling the route for Cleveland, yielded 13 hits, but a half dozen were of the scratch variety. It was his second victory, against three losses.

Knott Checks Macks, Chisox Score, 12-1

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 5.—The third-place White Sox backed up Jack Knott's three-hit pitching with a 15-hit bombardment against Bob Joyce and Roy Parmelee today to rout the Philadelphia Athletics, 12 to 1, and go ahead in the series, two games to one.

While Knott pitched steadily for the best effort by a White Sox hurler this season, his mates found Rookie Joyce for a run in the second inning, and three more in the third. Then they climaxed the assault with a six-run fifth inning that included Gee Walker's sixth homer and Ollie Bejma's fifth of the season and third in two days. The latter came with two on.

Every sox player hit safely at least once and all but Knott and Bejma got two hits.

Knott, finally grasping an elusive first victory in his fifth start, lost a shutout when he wild pitched Nick Etten home in the fourth inning after the A's first sacker doubled and advanced to third on a fly.

Roman Boy Scores Length Victory in Charles Town Race

Cats Cradle Wins Photo For Second

Faulconer's Winner Pays Only $3.20; Ann Groucher Takes 3d; Double Nets $46.60

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 5.—P. H. Faulconer's Roman Boy, the "Johnstown of Charles Town," furthered his claim as the sprint champion of these diggings by registering his third straight victory to keep his slate clean for the meeting. With Sammy Palumbo, the "Gem o' the Ocean," in the saddle, Roman Boy drove to the finish line a length in advance of a photo finish in which Cats Cradle took second money from Ann Groucher.

Racing at his special route of 4½ furlongs, Roman Boy was played as if the race had been run and paid a $3.20 mutuel. The track was a bit slow from last week's rain, and the winning son of Ha Ha was clocked in 0:52 1-5.

Roman Boy failed to break on top but Palumbo soon had him running as a team with Cats Cradle. At the turn, Roman Boy forged to the front and it appeared that he would draw out to a long lead. However, Cats Cradle gained momentum as Ann Groucher slid through on the rail and the two moved up.

The daily double paid a $46.60 mutuel. Rocky Mount, with Palumbo up, won the second race at an $8 mutuel and Trostar, paying $11, took the third race.

Baltimore Now 2d U. S. Seaport, 7th in Industry

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, June 5.—The industrial growth of Baltimore in the past 25 years as measured by value of manufactured products has outstripped the growth of the Nation as a whole and of other leading industrial cities including Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, Buffalo, Cincinnati and New Orleans, it is shown by the second industrial survey of Baltimore presented to the city at a dinner at the Baltimore Country Club tonight.

Herbert A. Wagner, president of the Consolidated Gas, Electric Light & Power Co. of Baltimore, was host at the dinner to a group of nationally known businessmen and industrialists.

Baltimore's rank among industrial centers of the United States has risen to seventh from eleventh place, the survey indicates. Over the period, 1914 to 1937, the value of products manufactured in Baltimore increased 211.4 per cent, wages in manufacturing industries rose 216.7 per cent, and number of wage earners gained 31.7 per cent, according to the survey.

Over the same period, the value of Baltimore's total water-borne commerce increased 162.8 per cent and total cargo tonnage, 113.6 per cent, to make Baltimore the second-ranking seaport, exceeded only by New York. Wholesale trade increased 130 per cent and retail trade, 163 per cent.

Wheat Topples With Prospect Of Big Crops

Prices Break 1¼ to 1¾ Cents to Lowest Level in Two Weeks

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 5.—Wheat values tumbled 1¼ to 1¾ cents today to the lowest level in almost two weeks in the sharpest break the market has had since the rise generated by crop deterioration began a month and a half ago.

Harvesting reports from Oklahoma and southern Kansas and elsewhere in the winter wheat belt where threshing crews are at work, indicating that yields are good and in some instances better than expected, had much to do with the increased volume of liquidation in the wheat pit.

Prospect of showery and cooler weather over much of the grain belt, with conditions very good for maturity of winter wheat and growth of spring wheat, added to trade bearishness and lower quotations at Liverpool, also proved to be a factor. Liverpool closed ½ to ¾ down at new lows for the season.

Closing prices put the value of summer delivery contracts below 76 cents July wheat was quoted at 75⅛@75¾ and September 75¾@75⅝ at the lowest point of the session. These quotations were more than 3 cents below the season's highs established about a week ago.

Other grains also worked lower with wheat, corn closing ⅜ to ½ down; July 50⅜@50¼, September 51¼; oats ½ to ⅝ lower; rye 1¼ to 1⅝ off and lard unchanged to 3 lower.

Europe Earmarks 1.265 Billion Gold

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Reserve Board disclosed yesterday that foreign governments and central banks have approximately $1,265,000,000 worth of gold stores in this country. Technically known as "earmarked" gold, most has come to this country since the Czecho-Slovakian crisis of last fall, and is in addition to the billions of dollars worth of gold which foreign governments, banks and individuals sent here for sale to the United States in the last year.

The owners of the gold were not identified, but some of the principal ones are understood to be England, France, Sweden, Switzerland and the Netherlands.

Stocks Mark Time Without Definite Trend Trading Leaves Nothing to Regulate Exchanges Now Apparently Hamstrung

New York, June 5.—Five officials of the New York Stock Exchange were in Washington today to resume round-table discussions with members of the Securities and Exchange Commission on the ways and best means of regulating security trading. Ironically enough it was a day on which there was virtually nothing to regulate, for on the big board only 349,470 shares changed hands and the movement of prices indicated there was neither speculative nor investment interest in securities. The price change, judged by the composite average, was minus 0.01 point.

In other words, discussions of regulating this business are rapidly getting into the field of the academic. In the praiseworthy efforts to drive from the market place the handful of sharpshooters who gave Wall Street a bad name in the late 1920s and the early 1930s, the regulatory authorities have at the same time so hamstrung the registered exchanges that there is less and less business to regulate. The advantage which the investor once had when trading in a listed security now has a questionable lease of life. The spread between bid and asked prices is as wide on the regulated boards as on the unregulated counter market.

New Capital Market

Contributing to the drying up of markets has been the stagnation of the market for new capital. With interest rates for Government bonds approaching the vanishing point, as the Treasury fights the battle of financing the Administration's growing deficit, and as the tax burden grows heavier with little promise of relief, the incentive for taking a risk in the field of finance holds little to lure the men or institutions who have money to invest. As a natural corollary we see the pressure within the New Deal's ranks for the Government to get deeper and deepr into the field of business, through making loans to businesses and financing industries which have been brought to their knees by the same New Deal's economic policies.

While investors ponder this problem their thoughts naturally turn to 1940. The swing to the right in 1938, carrying with it a mandate to have done with those policies of economics which are carrying the Nation deeper and deeper into debt without accomplishing their aims, was ignored by the Administration. But there is another election not so far away and as heavy as may be our burdens today, they can be carried if there be assurance that they will be lightened in time.

Farm Income

As a specific example of what has not been accomplished under our present form of economic procedure, today's news carried a report of the Department of Agriculture showing that farmers' income in 1938 dropped $1,130,000,000 from the 1937 level, the totals including gross from production and Government subsidies, and while we were thus cutting the income from the farms we were raising, by artificial methods, the price of our wheat and cotton to the point where we lost a good share of our normal participation in the world's market. It all looked well on paper, but agricultural reform along with most of the other brands that have been ground out of the New Deal mill turned out to be so much chaff.

While Wall street basked in the sunlight of sweet reform today and five of the officials of its exchange resumed discussions with the SEC on what can be done to save the wicked, those who are conducting business in the financial district interviewed the landlord and their employes wondered how soon the ax would fall. And those investors who wanted to sell some securities wondered why they couldn't get a fair market.

Thin Market

Many of the leading issues on the stock market hadn't even opened 20 minutes after trading started. A hundred shares was a big order and it was enough to swing a price out of line. The most active stock of the day was United States Rubber and its turnover was only 12,200 shares, which is about as much as a good sized opening block in the days of Satan.

Virtually one of the so-called active issues fluctuated as much as a point. The composite average of 100 representative issues moved within a range of 0.26 point. No group was able to stage any movement worthy of note.

Treasury Bonds Higher

Listed bonds climbed slowly in an idle market today, with United States Treasury securities still in the van of the movement. The boom in Governments reflects nothing more than the pressure of idle bank reserves and the lack of corporate offerings, but it is getting impressive. Corporate issues generally were in quiet request, with local tractions the chief gainers. Most foreign dollar bonds likewise improved. The turnover was only $4,520,000.

Advances in long-term Treasury bonds ranged from ten thirty-seconds of a point, which sufficed to produce highs in 15 issues. The ¾ per cent coupon on the new note issues stimulated inquiry for long bonds. Guaranteed issues of the farm and home corporations were dull, for fresh agency financing now is anticipated. Best rated corporate bonds showed fractional advances, and some new records appeared in this group.

Transit Issues Gain

Manhattan Elevated bonds moved up 1 to 4 points on legal moves in the lease situation. Smaller gains appeared in Interborough and B. M. T. bonds. Medium-priced railroad issues of the active group moved up by small fractions, but borderline and default bonds were neglected. Holding company bonds and industrial convertibles hardly moved. Communications bonds and other special groups were among the idle departments.

High-grade foreign bonds of Scandinavian, Australian and Canadian origin moved forward, and in some instances are verging on previous highs. There was a little interest in Italians, but Japanese bonds drifted downward. European default bonds were irregular, but most Latin-American disregarded pledges showed improvement.

Phils Shell Cub Hurlers; Win, 8 to 7

French, Root and Lillard Bombarded For 13 Safeties

Philadelphia, June 5 (AP).—The Phillies laced Larry French, Charlie Root and Gene Lillard for 13 hits to defeat the Cubs here today by the score of 8-7.

Kirby Higby, former Cub, started for the Phillies but was yanked in the eighth after allowing eight hits, walking five and hitting a batsman. Hugh Mulcahy replaced him.

Joe Marty, also a former cub, hit his third home run of the season in the third with Morrie Arnovich on base. Carl Reynolds hit his second with none on in the eighth.

French was knocked from the box and charged with his first defeat after four straight victories. Dizzy Dean pitched the Cubs, half of the eighth and didn't allow a hit.

ting outfielder, who has failed similarly to hit with men on bases. Buddy Myer is in a woeful slump and Buddy Lewis, who has started to hit, is no gem on third base.

Paradoxically, the Nats are near the top of the league in team batting, but the figures are a gross libel. The hits they have been getting are things that slither through the infield. Yesterday, for instance, they made three consecutive singles and didn't score a run.

The Nats didn't lose today, perhaps because they didn't play. Tomorrow they play the last of the series with the Browns, and Dutch Leonard will try to win a ball game. If he doesn't, Washington will be only a game and a half removed from the cellar.

On Fishing

Several sections of southern Florida are going in for fish tagging in a way that within a few years will assuredly give us some pertinent information as to the lives and migrations of the big game fish, which up to the present are almost as a closed book.

ACKERMAN

The West Palm Beach Fishing Club is using the (new to them) type of the gill cover clip on sailfish they release. This clip is a salmon tag, some of which were brought here from the West Coast last summer by Acting Commissioner Charles Jackson of the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries for tagging released white marlin off Ocean City.

The tremendous speed through the water and the acrobatic tendencies of these fish make a tail or dorsal tagging impossible, leaving only an abdominal insertion or gill clip as possible, with the latter by far the easiest. It is hoped that a large percentage of the fish released this season in Maryland waters will be so tagged.

Black bass season in the District of Columbia is open, and has been since May 30, for those who haven't taken the trouble to call in as so many have. We fail to note it deliberately for the reason there are so few waters unpolluted enough to fish.

Virginia Waters Open

Why not wait another few days, until June 15, when Virginia's waters east of the Blue Ridge are open. Some of the finest fishing in this section was had in Gunston Cove throughout last summer. Easily reached by following Route 1 to Pohick Church, turn left for 5 miles on the gravel road to the sign of Charles Treibler, where good boats are available at the usual rates, and bait also, if you fish them that way.

The season west of the mountains does not open until July 1, as does the streams above tidewater in Maryland. Maryland's tidewater season, which covers the coves and creeks in the Potomac below Washington, does not open until August 1.

Many anglers cannot understand the reasons for difference in the opening of the seasons, but it is purely a matter of geography and the quiet of natural conditions which the bass requires for reproduction. Without natural reproduction there could be no bass fishing.

The smallmouth usually builds the nest in fast water of gravel, and it is often several feet in diameter. Spawning takes place when the temperature is slightly above 60 degrees, and it takes several days for the female to deposit the eggs, which number from 2 to 10,000. After the male covers them with milt, he drives the female away from the nest and stands guard, darting at any aquatic invader which comes near enough to invite his wrath.

Feed in Schools

The eggs hatch in from two to ten days and the young fish stay on the nest until the yolk sac is consumed when they rise to the top in schools and swim to shallow pools along the shore to begin feeding on daphnia and other small aquatic organisms.

Largemouth black bass, lay their eggs on submerged vegetation, roots of trees and in the mud. The procedure of spawning is about the same as that of the smallmouth, except that the male of the largemouth herds the schools of young for some days after they hatch with far more care than the smallmouth which quickly loses interest and allows their young to go on their own much sooner.

The fighting proclivities of a bass on the nest—at which time any plug or line dropped nearby will be seized in no uncertain terms, make closed seasons necessary for this fish that has not been really successfully propagated in the hatchery. This is truly one species that should be allowed to spawn at least once before it is taken.

Weill's Demand Balks Title Fight

the fight should be handled. Then Weill spoke up.

"Gentlemen, I got a world's title here. I got a piece of goods I will sell you—but I want a guarantee of $15,000, win, lose or draw," he bawled.

Col. Harvey L. Miller, secretary of the commission, dropped his pencil. Ahearn gasped for air and Promoter Turner sent out for aspirin tablets.

"What good is a title if you ain't making any money with it?" Weill demanded. "I got offers to fight in New Orleans for $7,500. I could have fought today against Mike Belloise and get $2,500. I'm going to take Joey to Venezuela this week-end and fight for $3,000 and maybe $5,000—all guarantees."

Miller said he had talked with Pete Reilly, Scalzo's manager, about the plans for the fight and that Scalzo would fight for "a sack of peanuts."

Herman Berg, Jr., Wins

Minneapolis, June 5 (AP).—Red-headed Herman Berg, jr., brother of Patty Berg, the national women's golf champion, today won his first major golf title when he carded 78-77—156 to take the Minneapolis State high school championship over the university course here. Young Berg is a junior at Minneapolis Washburn High.

Zivic Beats LaSalle

Pittsburgh, June 5 (AP).—Fritzie Zivic, Pittsburgh's contender for Henry Armstrong's welterweight boxing title, clubbed his way tonight to a ten-round victory over Kenny LaSalle, a game veteran of Houston, who had beaten him recently in Texas.

Kavakos Wins

Kavakos Grill defeated Varsity Club, 8-3, yesterday in a Sherwood League game on the loser's field.

4 C. U. Grid Stars Compete In All-Star Poll

Will Help Pick Team To Play Philadelphia Eagles August 21

Four of Catholic University's graduating football players have been invited to compete in the balloting for the All-Star team which will meet the Philadelphia Eagles in Philadelphia on August 21.

The quartet is composed of John Kasunich, end; Wayne Ambrose, guard; Frank Cairo, guard, and Burke Vidnovic, left halfback.

The basis of selection will be a poll conducted by a Philadelphia newspaper, and 30 men will be chosen. The list calls for 12 backs, 5 guards, 5 tackles, 5 ends and 3 centers. Voting is limited to seniors of colleges within the radius of 150 miles of Philadelphia.

Last year, Leo Katalinas, big tackle now with the Green Bay Packers, was selected from Catholic University. Kasunich, who captained the Cardinals last season, may be unable to compete because of a recent operation on his knee.

Ambrose was a regular with C. U. for three seasons and is rated one of the best linemen in the East. Cairo, another three-year man, was also outstanding. Vidnovic was the spearhead of the C. U. attack last year and the best passer Dutch Bergman ever coached.

Voting closes July 31 and the chosen few will report for practice August 1.

All-Stars Beat Addison To Gain 2d-Half Flag

The All Stars nosed out Addison Chevrolet Motors, 15-13, to win the second half of the Powell Playground Community Center softball league. Lefty Houser starred at bat and in pitching for the winners in a game that moved the All Stars into a best two out of three game playoff with Addison. These games will be played Thursday and Friday at the Powell Playground.

B'nai B'rith Takes First In Fraternal League

The B'nai B'rith softball team took over undisputed first place in the Fraternal Sunday Morning League when it defeated the Nichol's team, 21-10, in a contest with five home runs by the winners, three of which fell to the powerful bat of Stanley Levy.

Helping B'nai B'rith to the lead was Sigma Alpha Kappa which was beaten in an upset by the Tsars.

Cardinal A. C. Beats No. 5 Police Club

The Cardinal A. C. opened the National City Junior baseball league with a 5-4 victory over Police Boys Club No. 5, on the Ellipse yestrday.

Vernon Haslup, Cardinal pitcher, allowed only five hits, and also contributed an eighth inning double which tied the score. He later tallied with the winning run.

Potomac Boat Club Plans 'Housecooling'

Gleaming with a new coat of paint and various alterations, the Potomac Boat Clubhouse will be the scene of a "housecooling," June 18, when the club crews will meet the Old Dominion Boat Club, of Alexandria, in rowing races on the course above Key Bridge.

The program will include canoe tilting and other forms of aquatic sports, in addition to the rowing races.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Maurice A. Porter, chairman of the Warwickshire Contract Bridge Association, is against the proposal of making the four suits equal. Instead, he has devised another plan of scoring which he believes will be simpler and will eradicate some of the present difficulties.

He writes:

"My own feeling is that it would be a mistake to put minor suits on an equality with major suits so that four clubs or diamonds bid and made would give a game. There is, however, one drawback to the present minor suit scoring which is brought out in match-point duplicate—it is that a minor suit game scores less than a major suit game and the same as a game in no trumps. The following table would meet this objection and it has the advantage of simplicity (an essential property of any scoring table):

No trumps	40 points a trick
Major suits	30 points a trick
Minor suits	25 points a trick
Game	120 points

"On this system, three no trumps and four of a major suit would give a game of 120 points, but five of a minor would give a game of 125 points. Other changes, slight but welcome, would be that two of a minor suit would score more than one no trump, three of a minor suit more than two of a major and four of a minor suit more than three of a major."

2 ♣	Pass	2 NT.	Pass
3 NT.	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: K ♠

Though there are many conflicting ideas as to what the proper laws and scoring should be, there are many more theories concerning the best way of bidding. In fact, it seems as if each bridge player has his own system—partly taken from his pet expert, partly picked up from actual experiences, and partly the product of special quirks of his personality.

It is almost impossible to find two bridge players who will agree as to the correct bid on a series of hands, and when they do it can usually be attributed to collusion for mutually selfish reasons.

Today's hand is contributed by a skillful player who is quite violent on the subject of light opening bids. Many equally fine players have enormous success with light openings, but this player is dead set against them.

The game at no trump, redoubled, was made through a squeeze. Here are our friend's comments on the bidding:

"Why West opened fourth hand is hard to figure out.

"His double of three no trump is in line with the opening bid.

"West led the king and ace of spades. South took the third spade trick and four diamonds. He then played the ten of hearts, West won with the ace and was afraid to play a heart as he thought South had the king jack. He led a club, South took with the king, and played the good spades. East was squeezed in hearts and clubs, and South made an overtrick.

"If North opens the bidding and gets the contract in three no trump a spade lead from East will set the hand."

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

A letter, signed by "A Reliefer," comes in, as follows:

"I am a reader of the Diary and in today's column (June 2) the 'see how it feels dinner' appeared. Some of the things that are listed fill me with apprehension, as I know from a reliefer's point of view just what is given. May I give you a true list of what is given now?

"Butter, grapefruit, once in a while a few raisins, a few pounds of cracked wheat, some graham flour and wheat flour once in a while and prunes and more prunes. They never forget to add prunes. And once in a while some dried navy beans. Do you see any fresh vegetables in this list? Nothing to sweeten the prunes or cook the beans with.

"I forgot to mention about cornmeal. They give some of it once in a while but, remember, they do not give all at the same time. If you get cornmeal you may get graham flour along with it or vice versa cracked wheat and wheat flour. Believe me, I am not trying to ridicule, but I do think if they have other than what I have told you to give, why don't the poor people receive it.

"I do try to make the food I receive from there as palatable as possible, but one just cannot exist day in and day out with this thing."

Presentation of awards to the winners in the merit system contest sponsored by the National Federation of Federal Employes will be made at 8 o'clock Wednesday night in the Interior Department auditorium. There will be a reading of the prize-winning essay by its author, Marie-Louise Ralph, 17-year-old Roosevelt High School student. . . . The next performance of the Union Playhouse will feature a one-act play, under direction of George Tredes. The play is "The Mad Hatters" and in the cast will be Myrtle Olson (REA); Myrtle Patschke (INT); Norman Dancy and Seth Weldon (AGR); Ed Collins (Navy Yard), and Happy Basiliko. This show, says its manager, Lee H. Shugar, will be dedicated to the State of Florida . . . Oliver C. Short, recently appointed director of personnel for the Commerce Department, will discuss the policies he hopes will take effect at a meeting to be held Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the department's auditorium. The meeting is being sponsored by Commerce Local 23, U. F. W. A. . . . Concerning horseshoe pitching: Jackson Ross, of the Budget Bureau, would like all Treasury Recreation Association members who are interested in horseshoe pitching to contact him on Treasury branch 2104. A team will be entered in the Departmental League if sufficient interest is shown . . . The activities of the Treasury Department Recreation Association Glee Club have been suspended for the summer, it being too hot for the tenors to do justice to the upper notes of "Annie Laurie" . . .

Bob Burns Says—

More trouble has started from snap judgment than anythin' I know. A man ought-ta sit down and sorta look ahead a little bit before arrivin' at a decision. I use'ta go with a girl who had the jolliest smile you ever saw. She always looked like somebody was ticklin' her feet. Then she married a fellow after a whirlwind flirtation—and a year later he was in the hospital with an advanced case of "Rolling Pin Head."

Last spring, Grandpaw Snazzy went to Little Rock to visit Uncle Fud. He said, "Fud, whatever happened to them three no-'count boys of yours? The little one was an awful liar, the second one was a lazy whittler and the third went around the streets bummin' money. Are they in jail now?"

Fud said, "Jail nothin'. Why since them boys was educated the first one is a famous lawyer, the whittler is a big surgeon and the beggar is the local tax collector."

Secrets in Love

By Phyllis Moore Gallagher

Chapter XXX

Paul Stranyan's Ambassador was entertaining at a dinner in honor of a famous aviator from his homeland. He was receiving his guests in the long drawing room, ablaze with lights and scarlet flowers. The Ambassador kissed Peg's hand and presented her to his hostess, who was the wife of his military attache. In that moment Peg seemed a very self-assured and calm young lady in her trailing black dress with her fair curls piled high on her head.

But Peg wasn't calm at all. This Embassy had once been the Richards' mansion. And moving down the long drawing-room to a blue brocaded sofa that stood on the identical spot where another blue-brocaded sofa with a "Do Not Touch" sign had stood, she sank down on it with a suddenly stirring heart. This was a different sofa and there was no sign on it now, but the drawing room was terribly, hauntingly the same. She was thinking how many changes had come into her life since that autumn day when a young man in wedding splendor had introduced himself by saying, "Does that sign mean you or the blue-brocaded affair you're sitting on?"

And then suddenly through the fog of her thoughts she heard someone say, excitedly: "Hel-loo there, Tony! Why Evangeline, darling! But how perfectly delightful!"

Peg's eyes turned swiftly toward the center of the drawing room. The days seemed to recede, one piling swiftly upon the top of another, until it was autumn.

It was autumn all over again, and yet how completely different. Anthony wore tails now instead of wedding splendor. And he was not alone. A small blonde girl had come in with him. She stood beside him now with an obvious possessiveness.

Afterward Peg could never remember just how she got through that dinner. Or even those brief strained moments before the butler announced that dinner was served. Anthony, seeing her there on the blue-brocaded sofa, came straight to her and took her hand. He said he was certainly glad to see her and where on earth had she been keeping herself, and she said it certainly was nice to see him, too, and hadn't it been a long time and she'd been around.

Then he was introducing Evangeline Martin and Peg was feeling the girl's eyes moving over her like cold marbles. "Why she despises me! Why should she look at me like that!" Peg wondered through her confusion.

After that there was an awkward silence, though Peg felt everyone in the room had ceased their chattering and their cocktail sipping and their hors d'oeuvre selecting just so they could quietly listen to the wild thump of her heart.

When Paul Stranyan came up and joined the little group she swayed toward him dizzily, very grateful for the support of his fingers on her bare elbow. "I can't stand it," she thought, in panic. "I just can't stay here now."

But she did say. She even talked. Anthony told her that he was returning to France in the morning now that Joan was quite herself again, and Peg said something perfectly silly, she knew, about French fishermen's sailboats having colored sails.

Anthony brought the conversation around after a while to the Damaras. They spied once too often, he decided, and Peg said, "Yes, my goodness, didn't they, though?" Which wasn't a very original thing to say when two people had been stood up before a firing squad.

At the Dinner

Later, Peg sat at the long, glittering table in the dining room. It was, she supposed, a very gay dinner indeed. Tomorrow the society editors would list the impressive names of the guests; they would describe the lovely gowns worn by the women and they would say that the aviator was dark and handsome and had given all the young girls present a mortal stab in the heart.

They would say that the Ambassador always charming and gracious, was even more charming and gracious than usual tonight. That his hostess was a small witty person and the rich flow of her voice seemed to hold everyone at the table.

They wouldn't say a thing about the real drama of the evening; the way Anthony kept looking at Peg over the calla lilies on the black velvet-colored table; the way Peg glanced up now and then and found Evangeline Martin's eyes cold and resentful on her.

Nor would they report that twice Peg tried to drink some water and had not been able to do so because of her fingers trembling on the long crystal stem. Indeed, Peg found the actual business of eating dinner—even pretending to—a torture.

After dinner the men lingered over liqueurs and cigarettes in the dining room and the women moved into the drawing room. Evangeline Martin, spreading her white net skirts out carefully on the little rose-colored love seat, made not the slightest attempt to further her acquaintance with Peg. Rather, she seemed to avoid her, to draw deliberately all the other women into a little knot of attention and animated conversation which did not include Peg at all.

But if Evangeline had set out to hurt Peg, she had failed. Peg's mind was centered on one thing only: to stay just as long as was properly required of her and then to ask Paul to take her home. "I'll get me a headache," she decided, miserably. "I'll faint. I'll do anything, but I won't stay here one second longer than I have to. Oh—I can't . . ."

When the men came in Peg did not look up. She was sitting apart from all the other women on the blue-brocaded sofa, doing things to the handkerchief in her fingers. She had made a bunny with long big ears out of it a dozen times; she had made sailor's knots and bow ties. Now she was in the process of tearing it in half. She did not know that Anthony was beside her until he had her hand, until he began drawing her out on the balcony that overlooked Sheridan Circle.

Anthony Again

The night breathed on them like a soft caress. Anthony said: "Nice?"

Peg swallowed hard. "Yes—yes, isn't it?"

Anthony said yes, it was certainly a very nice night indeed. Then suddenly he said: "Peg, I hear the engagement to Hewitt is all off. Did some one—more important come along?"

Peg said with her heart stamping up and down all over her body: "Yes, Anthony—that's right. Some one—more important—came along."

And then she said, very brightly: "But I haven't had a chance to congratulate you, Anthony. I read of your engagement, but I haven't seen you since. I meant to write and tell you how happy I was for you, but somehow—I didn't."

Anthony listened to that very quietly, and then after a moment or so he remarked: "I'm not engaged, Peg. I haven't the faintest idea how that announcement got in the papers. Nor has Evangeline. She believes some girls she knows did it—sort of a practical joke. I didn't have the article denied. It was scarcely my place to, you know. And Evangeline didn't either. She thought it would be less embarrassing all the way round if we let it die out gradually.

Peg's heart stood still. For the first time that evening she was thinking with a perfectly clear brain. She was understanding a great many things which had confused her earlier. She understood why Evengeline had stared at her so fixedly, so resentfully during dinner; why the girl had ignored her after dinner.

Evangeline had evidently heard that Anthony had been in love with her last autumn. And Peg knew with an amazing clarity that Evangeline, herself, had had that announcement put in the papers. She had done it because she had thought that once her engagement to Anthony was announced it would eventually become an actuality. She had followed Anthony to France and back again, and though this technique might work on some men it would never work on Anthony.

Peg's voice was soft and smothered with her amazement when she spoke. "Anthony, I—I can't believe you aren't engaged. For so long I've thought you were . . ."

And Anthony, miserably, with an absolute seriousness said: "My God, Peg, I don't see how you could have believed I was. I've never loved any one but you. I stepped out because of Hewitt. I avoided seeing you all those days before I went away simply because I didn't trust myself to see you again. Because it hurt too much. And then, yesterday when Joan told me that you and Hewitt had broken off I nearly went out of my head. I thought I had a chance, but Evangeline said you had broken your engagement because you had fallen in love with Paul Stranyan . . ."

Love Wins at Last

Peg held her breath. There was a ringing in her heart, in her ears, in her brain. Her legs were trembling helplessly beneath her. For a long moment she couldn't speak; she just stood there supported by the balcony rail, drowned in happiness. When she did speak, her voice was all choked up in her throat. She said, "Oh, Anthony—oh, my darling . . ."

In the next moment Anthony had her in his arms. He was holding her terribly close, his lips against her fair hair, then on her cheek and finally on her lips. She stood back from that kiss at last, breathlessly.

She said, "Anthony Covington, whatever on earth are we doing out here on this balcony! If I'm going to France tomorrow, I've got packing to do and a letter of resignation to write and people to see and—oh, all sorts of things!"

Anthony was grinning then, and Paul Stranyan who had stepped out on the balcony in that moment, was grinning, too. He said very soberly, "I think I can manage to see Evangeline home, Tony. If that will help this situation in any way."

But behind Paul Stranyan's grin, there was heartbreak. Peg saw it and winced. Her fingers went to his arm, gently. She said, in a whisper, "Oh, Paul—I'm so very sorry—please forgive me . . ."

But there was, she knew, nothing to be forgiven really. Paul Stranyan had always known about Anthony. He had told her only this evening on their way to the embassy that he would never believe in his good luck until they were actually married.

Paul was still grinning at them when Peg and Anthony thanked the ambassador for the happiest evening of their lives, which he took not for the truth which it was but for flagrant flattery; they told the aviator how proud they had been to meet him and how glad they were that he had come to Washington. They had meant that, too, for if he hadn't come, if there hadn't been a dinner, Anthony might have sailed away in the morning without seeing Peg. On such little happenings in life does fate mold and change the future.

Then Peg and Anthony were sailing down the long marble stairs and through the gold and scarlet foyer and out into the star-studded night.

The end.

Dr. Smith Wins Miss Lenroot's Partial Backing

Praise of Theories Is Qualified by Doubt Of Her Administration

Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith's regime as superintendent of the National Training School yesterday received qualified indorsement from Miss Katherine F. Lenroot, head of the Children's Bureau, as hearings continued on Dr. Smith's dismissal in 1937.

Acting as her own attorney, the former superintendent elicited from Miss Lenroot the statement that Dr. Smith had carried out "great accomplishments" in a brief period at the school. Dr. Smith approached "a peculiarly difficult situation" at the school, Miss Lenroot said, with "modern and progressive theories."

When asked by Assistant Corporation Counsel Oliver Gasch whether Dr. Smith "properly administered these modern theories," the Labor Department official conceded that previous testimony as to immorality and lack of discipline at the school indicated "a great deal was wrong in the administration."

Miss Lenroot also pointed out that, in recommending Dr. Smith to Elwood Street, then director of public welfare, as "a real crusader" who could "modernize the program and equipment of the school," she advised Street to investigate the circumstances in which, she said, Dr. Smith was asked to resign from the Maryland State School for Girls.

"Shocking" conditions prevailed at the school at the time of Dr. Smith's appointment, Miss Lenroot said. She testified that the institution was "infested with rats and vermin," that "heavily barred and padlocked" disciplinary cells were in use and that only one parole officer was on duty to supervise 100 parolees. These problems, she asserted, Dr. Smith attacked with "courage and enthusiasm."

Another witness for Dr. Smith was Mrs. William Kittle, past president of the District League of Women Voters and chairman of the District Minimum Wage Board. The real problem at the training school, Mrs. Kittle declared, was the "archaic" law under which it operated and the staff's long training in "punitive methods."

"It is not surprising," she said, "that a new superintendent had difficulties in trying to bring about new methods."

Robins Is Promoted

President Roosevelt yesterday nominated Col. Thomas Matthews Robins, commandant of Fort Belvoir, Va., and a native of Maryland, to be Assistant Chief of Army Engineers, with rank of brigadier general.

ROBINS

At the same time, the President named Capt. Leon Claude Covell to be assistant commandant of the Coast Guard with rank of rear admiral. Capt. Covell has been filling the post for several years and will have the higher rank under a recently passed law.

Col. Robins will succeed Brig. Gen. Max C. Tyler who has been appointed president of the Mississippi River Commission. Col. Robins was born in Snow Hill, county seat of Worcester County, Md., in 1881, and appointed to West Point in 1900. Upon graduation he was ordered to duty at Washington Barracks, D. C., and has had numerous assignments here since.

The new Assistant Engineer Chief served at the War Department during the World War and returned to the Army War College in 1926. He became commandant of Fort Belvoir and the Engineer School last June.

Rites Tomorrow For Rev. W. E. Allen

The Rev. Mr. Allen died at his home in Croome Sunday night. He was born at Seneca Lake, N. Y., and had served churches in Vineland, N. J.; Galveston, Tex.; Shelby, N. C., and Ivy Depot, Va. He came to St. John's six years ago.
